PREFACE.

IT is the fate of thoſe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the proſpect of good; to be expoſed to cenſure, without hope of praiſe, to be diſgraced by miſcarriage, or puniſhed for neglect, where ſucceſs would have been without applauſe, and diligence without reward.

Among theſe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have conſidered, not as the pupil, but the ſlave of ſcience, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbiſh and clear obſtructions from the paths through which Learning and Genius preſs forward to conqueſt and glory, without beſtowing a ſmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progreſs. Every other author may aſpire to praiſe; the lexicographer can only hope to eſcape reproach, and even this negative recompenſe has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithſtanding this diſcouragement, attempted a Dictionary of the Engliſh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every ſpecies of literature, has itſelf been hitherto neglected; ſuffered to ſpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance; reſigned to the tyranny of time and faſhion; and expoſed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the firſt ſurvey of my undertaking, I found our ſpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be diſentangled, and confuſion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundleſs variety, without any eſtabliſhed principle of ſelection; adulterations were to be detected, without a ſettled teſt of purity; and modes of expreſſion to be rejected or received, without the ſuffrages of any writers of claſſical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no aſſiſtance but from general grammar, I applied myſelf to the peruſal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of uſe to aſcertain or illuſtrate any word or phraſe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eſtabliſhing to myſelf, in the progreſs of the work, ſuch rules as experience and analogy ſuggeſted to me, experience, which practice and obſervation were continually increaſing; and analogy, which, though in ſome words obſcure, was evident in others.

In adjuſting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unſettled and fortuitous, I found it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh thoſe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themſelves once unneceſſary, muſt be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiſtered, that they may not be increaſed, and aſcertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewiſe its improprieties and abſurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proſcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceſſary or common uſe were ſpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any viſible ſigns, muſt have been ſpoken with great diverſity, as we now obſerve thoſe who cannot read to catch ſounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firſt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to expreſs, as he could, the ſounds which he was accuſtomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing ſuch words as were already vitiated in ſpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muſt have been vague and unſettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the ſame ſound by different combinations.

From

From this uncertain pronunciation arises in a great part the various dialects of the ſame country, which will always be obſerved to grow wider and leſs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary repreſentation of ſounds by letters, proceeds that diverſity of ſpelling obſervable in the Saxon remains, and I ſuppoſe in the firſt books of every nation, which perplexes or deſtroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, that, being once incorporated, can never be afterwards diſmiſſed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ſtrength from ſtrong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una? to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is moſt frequent in the vowels, which are ſo capriciouſly pronounced, and ſo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but ſpots of barbarity impreſſed ſo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away: theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched; but many words have likewiſe been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variouſly written, as authors differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power, are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in choak, choke; ſoap, ſope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inſerted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inſerted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every author his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge between us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected thoſe in which our words are commonly to be ſought. Thus Hammond writes feciblneſs for feaſibleneſs, becauſe I ſuppoſe he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and ſome words, ſuch as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final ſyllable, as one or another language is preſent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity ſought praiſe by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a ſcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thoſe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thoſe, whoſe thoughts have been perhaps employed too anxiouſly on verbal ſingularities, not to diſturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been aſſerted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, ſays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worſe to better. There is in conſtancy and ſtability a general and laſting advantage, which will always overbalance the ſlow improvements of gradual correction.

Much

Much leſs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itſelf, and imitate thoſe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obſerving them.

This recommendation of ſteadineſs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happineſs; or that truth may not be ſucceſsfully taught by modes of ſpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet ſo loſt in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the ſons of heaven. Language is only the inſtrument of ſcience, and words are but the ſigns of ideas: I wiſh, however, that the inſtrument might be leſs apt to decay, and that ſigns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In ſettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated ſyllable. It will ſometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different ſyllable from that marked in the alphabetical ſeries; it is then to be underſtood, that cuſtom has varied, or that the author has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are ſometimes given where the ſound of letters is irregular; and if they are ſometimes omitted, defect in ſuch minute obſervations will be more eaſily excuſed, than ſuperfluity.

In the inveſtigation both of the orthography and ſignification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was neceſſarily to be conſidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any Engliſh root; thus circumſpect, circumvent, circumſtance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives are all thoſe that can be referred to any word in Engliſh of greater ſimplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy ſometimes needleſs; for who does not ſee that remoteneſs comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonſtrative from demonſtrate? but this grammatical exuberance the ſcheme of my work did not allow me to repreſs. It is of great importance, in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the uſual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity muſt be preſerved in ſyſtematical works, though ſometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to inſert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to thoſe who have always uſed them, interrupt and embarraſs the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Moſt of our polyſyllables are Roman, and our words of one ſyllable are very often Teutonick.

In aſſigning the Roman original, it has perhaps ſometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and conſidering myſelf as employed only in the illuſtration of my own language, I have not been very careful to obſerve whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obſolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or uſurp their honours, but that I might ſpare a general repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of theſe, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inſtructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of underſtanding. Junius was accurately ſkilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occaſional inſpection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other uſe than to ſhow him a track by which he may deviate from his purpoſe, to which Skinner always preſſes forward by the ſhorteſt way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety diſtracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently diſgraced by his abſurdities.

The votaries of the northern muſes will not perhaps eaſily reſtrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a diſadvantageous compariſon; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of cenſoriouſneſs to charge that etymologiſt with want of judgment, who can ſeriouſly derive dream from drama, becauſe life is a drama, and a drama is a dream.

dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, ſingle or ſolitary, who conſiders that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is ſo ſcanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick, the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inſerted Dutch or German ſubſtitutes, which I conſider not as radical, but parallel, not as the parents, but ſiſters of the Engliſh.

The words which are repreſented as thus related by deſcent or cognation, do not always agree in ſenſe; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their anceſtors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is ſufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the ſenſes of kindred words be found ſuch as may eaſily paſs into each other, or ſuch as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, ſo far as it is yet known, was eaſily found in the volumes where it is particularly and profeſſedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was ſoon adjuſted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a taſk of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhauſted, what was yet wanting muſt be ſought by fortuitous and unguided excurſions into books, and gleaned as induſtry ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my deſign was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; ſuch as Arian, Socinian, Calviniſt, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries; and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtered as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant; but have received thoſe which by different writers have been differently formed, as viſcid, and viſcidity, viſcous, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſeldom noted, except when they obtain a ſignification different from that which the components have in their ſimple ſtate. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horſecourſer, require an explanation; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becauſe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conſtant and ſettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in iſh, as greeniſh, bluiſh; adverbs in ly, as dully, openly; ſubſtantives in neſs, as vileneſs, faultineſs; were leſs diligently ſought, and ſometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to inſert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of Engliſh roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

* That I may not appear to have ſpoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here ſubjoined a few ſpecimens of his etymological extravagance.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the keeping of the caſtle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the ſenſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horſe, a horſe that can pace: theſe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are theſe always inſerted, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the univerſal negligence of my predeceſſors, by inſerting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that uſe and curioſity are here ſatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is ſo little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many words by a particle ſubjoined; as to come off, to eſcape by a ſtratagem; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoſtatize; to break off, to ſtop abruptly; to bear out, to juſtify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to ceaſe; to ſet off, to embelliſh; to ſet in, to begin a continual tenour; to ſet out, to begin a courſe or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expreſſions of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear widely irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the collection is complete, I believe I have ſo far aſſiſted the ſtudents of our language, that this kind of phraſeology will be no longer inſuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainſworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries ſubjoined; of theſe I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of ſuch I have omitted many, becauſe I had never read them; and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my notice: they are, however, to be yet conſidered as reſting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I conſidered as uſeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at preſent ſupport them by authorities, I have ſuffered to ſtand upon my own atteſtation, claiming the ſame privilege with my predeceſſors, of being ſometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus ſelected and diſpoſed, are grammatically conſidered; they are referred to the different parts of ſpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuſtrated by obſervations, not indeed of great or ſtriking importance, ſeparately conſidered, but neceſſary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Engliſh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moſt frequently to faſten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to ſatisfy thoſe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleaſed, ſince I have not always been able to ſatisfy myſelf. To interpret a language by itſelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by ſynonimes, becauſe the idea ſignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphraſe, becauſe ſimple ideas cannot be deſcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unſettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which ſuch notions are conveyed, or ſuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And ſuch is the fate of hapleſs lexicography, that not only darkneſs, but light, impedes and diſtreſſes it; things may be not only too little but too much known, to be happily illuſtrated. To explain, requires the uſe of terms leſs abſtruſe than that which is to be explained, and ſuch terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but the ſuppoſing ſomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, ſo nothing can be defined but by the uſe of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the ſenſe is too ſubtle and evaneſcent to be fixed in a paraphraſe; ſuch are all thoſe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are ſuffered to paſs for empty ſounds, of no other uſe than to fill a verſe, or to modulate a period, but which are eaſily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphaſis, though it be ſometimes ſuch as no other form of expreſſion can convey.

My labour has likewiſe been much increaſed by a claſs of verbs too frequent in the Engliſh language, of which the ſignification is ſo looſe and general, the uſe ſo vague and indeterminate, and the ſenſes detorted ſo widely from the firſt idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumſcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diſtinct and ſettled meaning; ſuch are bear, break, come, caſt, full, get, give, do, put, ſet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of theſe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muſt be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that ſpeaks it, theſe words are hourly ſhifting their relations, and can no more be aſcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ſtorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with ſo great latitude, that they are not eaſily reducible under any regular ſcheme of explication: this difficulty is not leſs, nor perhaps greater, in Engliſh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with ſucceſs; ſuch at leaſt as can be expected in a taſk, which no man, however learned or ſagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, becauſe I do not underſtand them; theſe might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not ſo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeſſion: for when Tully owns himſelf ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral ſong, or mourning garment; and Ariſtotle doubts whether οὖρες, in the Iliad, ſignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may ſurely, without ſhame, leave ſome obſcurities to happier induſtry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, ſhould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are ſeldom exactly ſynonimous; a new term was not introduced, but becauſe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceſſary to uſe the proximate word, for the deficiency of ſingle terms can very ſeldom be ſupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of ſuch mutilated interpretations, becauſe the ſenſe may eaſily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenſive uſe, it was requiſite to mark the progreſs of its meaning, and ſhow by what gradations of intermediate ſenſe it has paſſed from its primitive to its remote and accidental ſignification; ſo that every foregoing explanation ſhould tend to that which follows, and the ſeries be regularly concatenated from the firſt notion to the laſt.

This is ſpecious, but not always practicable; kindred ſenſes may be ſo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be diſentangled, nor any reaſon be aſſigned why one ſhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a conſecutive ſeries be formed of ſenſes in their nature collateral? The ſhades of meaning ſometimes paſs imperceptibly into each other; ſo that though on one ſide they apparently differ, yet it is impoſſible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the ſame race, though not exactly alike, are ſometimes ſo little different, that no words can expreſs the diſſimilitude, though the mind eaſily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and ſometimes there is ſuch a confuſion of acceptations, that diſcernment is wearied, and diſtinction puzzled, and perſeverance herſelf hurries to an end, by crowding together what ſhe cannot ſeparate.

Theſe complaints of difficulty will, by thoſe that have never conſidered words beyond their popular uſe, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his ſtudies by involution and obſcurity. But every art is obſcure to thoſe that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to thoſe who have joined philoſophy with grammar; and if I have

I have not expreſſed them very clearly, it muſt be remembered that I am ſpeaking of that which words are inſufficient to explain.

The original ſenſe of words is often driven out of uſe by their metaphorical acceptations, yet muſt be inſerted for the ſake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is uſed for material heat, or whether flagrant, in Engliſh, ever ſignifies the ſame with burning; yet ſuch are the primitive ideas of theſe words, which are therefore ſet firſt, though without examples, that the figurative ſenſes may be commodiouſly deduced.

Such is the exuberance of ſignification which many words have obtained, that it was ſcarcely poſſible to collect all their ſenſes; ſometimes the meaning of derivatives muſt be ſought in the mother term, and ſometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be ſupplied in the train of derivation. In any caſe of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the ſame race; for ſome words are ſlightly paſſed over to avoid repetition, ſome admitted eaſier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better underſtood, as they are conſidered in greater variety of ſtructures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the ſame ſkill, or the ſame happineſs: things equally eaſy in themſelves, are not all equally eaſy to any ſingle mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to miſlead, nor obſcurity to confound him; and in a ſearch like this, many felicities of expreſſion will be caſually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many ſeeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus ſome explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as kind, the female of the ſtag; ſtag, the male of the kind: ſometimes eaſier words are changed into harder, as burial into ſepulture or interment, drier into deſiccative, dryneſs into ſiccity or aridity, fit into paroxyſm; for the eaſieſt word, whatever it be, can never be tranſlated into one more eaſy. But eaſineſs and difficulty are merely relative, and if the preſent prevalence of our language ſhould invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be aſſiſted by thoſe words which now ſeem only to increaſe or produce obſcurity. For this reaſon I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHLER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of Engliſh may be aſſiſted by his own tongue.

The ſolution of all difficulties, and the ſupply of all defects, muſt be ſought in the examples, ſubjoined to the various ſenſes of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When I firſt collected theſe authorities, I was deſirous that every quotation ſhould be uſeful to ſome other end than the illuſtration of a word; I therefore extracted from philoſophers principles of ſcience; from hiſtorians remarkable facts; from chymiſts complete proceſſes; from divines ſtriking exhortations; and from poets beautiful deſcriptions. Such is deſign, while it is yet at a diſtance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wiſdom into an alphabetical ſeries, I ſoon diſcovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the ſtudent, and was forced to depart from my ſcheme of including all that was pleaſing or uſeful in Engliſh literature, and reduce my tranſcripts very often to cluſters of words, in which ſcarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the wearineſs of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some paſſages I have yet ſpared, which may relieve the labour of verbal ſearches, and interſperſe with verdure and flowers the dusty deſarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be conſidered as conveying the ſentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the ſake of which they are inſerted, with all its appendant clauſes, has been carefully preſerved; but it may ſometimes happen, by haſty detruncation, that the general tendency of the ſentence may be changed: the divine may deſert his tenets, or the philoſopher his ſyſtem.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as maſters of elegance or models of ſtyle; but words muſt be ſought where they are uſed; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations ſerve no other purpoſe, than that of proving the bare exiſtence of words, and are therefore ſelected with leſs ſcrupulouſneſs than thoſe which are to teach their ſtructures and relations.

My purpoſe was to admit no teſtimony of living authors, that I might not be miſled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reaſon to complain; nor have I departed from this reſolution but when ſome performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory ſupplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderneſs of friendſhip, ſolicited admiſſion for a favourite name.

* So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have ſtudiouſly endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reſtoration, whoſe works I regard as the wells of Engliſh undefiled, as the pure ſources of genuine diction. Our language, for almoſt a century, has, by the concurrence of many cauſes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick ſtructure and phraſeology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of ſtyle, admitting among the additions of later times, only ſuch as may ſupply real deficiencies, ſuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eaſily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeneſs antecedent to perfection, as well as of falſe refinement and declenſion, I have been cautious leſt my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer underſtood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excurſions. From the authors which roſe in the time of Eliſabeth, a ſpeech might be formed adequate to all the purpoſes of uſe and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the tranſlation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phraſes of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenſer and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakeſpeare, few ideas would be loſt to mankind, for want of Engliſh words, in which they might be expreſſed.

It is not ſufficient that a word is found, unleſs it be ſo combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the ſentence; ſuch paſſages I have therefore choſen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or ſuch an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a ſupplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwiſe obſerved.

Some words, indeed, ſtand unſupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns, or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and conſtant analogy, or names of things ſeldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reaſon to doubt the exiſtence.

There is more danger of cenſure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will ſometimes ſeem to have been accumulated without neceſſity or uſe, and perhaps ſome will be found, which might, without loſs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not haſtily to be charged with ſuperfluities: thoſe quotations, which to careleſs or unſkilful peruſers appear only to repeat the ſame ſenſe, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diverſities of ſignification, or, at leaſt, afford different ſhades of the ſame meaning: one will ſhew the word applied to perſons, another to things; one will expreſs an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral ſenſe; one will prove the expreſſion genuine from an ancient author; another will ſhew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous ſentence is aſcertained by a paſſage clear and determinate; the word, how often ſoever repeated, appears with new aſſociates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes ſomething to the ſtability or enlargement of the language.

When words are uſed equivocally, I receive them in either ſenſe; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have ſometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of ſentiments, by ſhewing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: ſuch quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might juſtly be cenſured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiſtory.

The various ſyntactical ſtructures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto uſed, has made our ſtyle capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the ſame word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured by ſettling the orthography, diſplaying the analogy, regulating the ſtructures, and aſcertaining the ſignification of Engliſh words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have have not always executed my own ſcheme, or ſatisfied my own expectations: The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is ſtill controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are ſometimes too much contracted, and ſometimes too much diffuſed, the ſignifications are diſtinguiſhed rather with ſubtilty than ſkill, and the attention is haraſſed with unneceſſary minuteneſs.

The examples are too often injudiciouſly truncated, and perhaps ſometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a miſtaken ſenſe; for in making this collection I truſted more to memory, than, in a ſtate of diſquiet and embarraſſment, memory can contain, and purpoſed to ſupply at the review what was left incomplete in the firſt tranſcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though neceſſary and ſignificant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words moſt ſtudiouſly conſidered and exemplified, many ſenſes have eſcaped obſervation.

Yet theſe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the ſtrength that undertakes it: To reſt below his own aim is incident to every one whoſe fancy is active, and whoſe views are comprehenſive; nor is any man ſatisfied with himſelf becauſe he has done much, but becauſe he can conceive little. When firſt I engaged in this work, I reſolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleaſed myſelf with a proſpect of the hours which I ſhould revel away in feaſts of literature, the obſcure receſſes of northern learning which I ſhould enter and ranſack, the treaſures with which I expected every touch into thoſe neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I ſhould diſplay my acquiſitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I reſolved to ſhow my wider attention to things; to pierce deep into every ſcience, to enquire the nature of every ſubſtance of which I inſerted the name, to limit every idea by a definition ſtrictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate deſcription, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But theſe were the dreams of a poet doomed at laſt to wake a lexicographer. I ſoon found that it is too late to look for inſtruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever preparatives I had brought to my taſk, with thoſe I muſt finally perform it. To deliberate whether I ſhould attempt to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and perhaps without much improvement; for I did not find by my firſt experiments, that what I knew not of my own was eaſily to be obtained: I ſaw that one enquiry only gave occaſion to another, that book referred to book, that to ſearch was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to purſue perfection, was, like the firſt inhabitants of Arcadia, to chaſe the ſun, which, when they had reached the hill where he ſeemed to reſt, was ſtill beheld at the ſame diſtance from them.

I therefore contracted my deſign, determining to confide in myſelf, and no longer to ſollicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than aſſiſtance: by this I obtained at leaſt one advantage, that I ſet limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Deſpondence has never ſo far prevailed as to depreſs me to negligence; ſome faults will at laſt appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and perſevering activity. The nice and ſubtle ramifications of meaning were not eaſily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the neceſſity of diſentangling combinations, and ſeparating ſimilitudes. Many of the diſtinctions, which to common readers appear uſeleſs and idle, will be found real and important by men verſed in the ſchool philoſophy, without which no dictionary can ever be accurately compiled, or ſkilfully examined.

Some ſenſes however there are, which, though not the ſame, are yet ſo nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Moſt men think indiſtinctly, and therefore cannot ſpeak with exactneſs; and conſequently ſome examples might be indifferently put to either ſignification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but regiſter the language; who do not teach men how they ſhould think, but relate how they have hitherto expreſſed their thoughts.

The imperfect ſenſe of ſome examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compenſated by innumerable paſſages ſelected with propriety, and preſerved with exactneſs, ſome ſhining with ſparks of imagination, and ſome replete with treaſures of wiſdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but becauſe care will not always be ſucceſsful, and recollection or information come too late for uſe.

PREFACE.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, muſt be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not viſit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my ſkill in the dialect of navigation, nor viſit the warehouſes of merchants, and ſhops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or eaſy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeleſs labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and conteſting with the ſullenneſs of one, and the roughneſs of another.

To furniſh the academicians della Cruſca with words of this kind, a ſeries of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was profeſſedly written by Buonarroti; but I had no ſuch aſſiſtant, and therefore was content to want what they muſt have wanted likewiſe, had they not luckily been ſo ſupplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omiſſions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great meaſure caſual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for ſome temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a ſtate of increaſe or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore muſt be ſuffered to periſh with other things unworthy of preſervation.

Care will ſometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which ſeldom occur, will ſuffer thoſe to paſs by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is ſearching for rare and remote things, will neglect thoſe that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the moſt common and curſory words have been inſerted with little illuſtration, becauſe in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy thoſe which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eaſy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatneſs, and diſdainful of littleneſs, haſtily withdraws herſelf from painful ſearches, and paſſes with ſcornful rapidity over taſks not adequate to her powers, ſometimes too ſecure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; ſometimes idle in a plain path, and ſometimes diſtracted in labyrinths, and diſſipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult becauſe it is large, even though all its parts might ſingly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each muſt be allowed its ſhare of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the ſtones which form the dome of a temple, ſhould be ſquared and poliſhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with ſo much application, I cannot but have ſome degree of parental fondneſs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thoſe who have been perſuaded to think well of my deſign, will require that it ſhould fix our language, and put a ſtop to thoſe alterations which time and chance have hitherto been ſuffered to make in it without oppoſition. With this conſequence I will confeſs that I flattered myſelf for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reaſon nor experience can juſtify. When we ſee men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promiſes to prolong life to a thouſand years; and with equal juſtice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preſerved their words and phraſes from mutability, ſhall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and ſecure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change ſublunary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been inſtituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulſe intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; ſounds are too volatile and ſubtile for legal reſtraints; to enchain ſyllables, and to laſh the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to meaſure its deſires by its ſtrength. The French language has viſibly changed under the inſpection of the academy; the ſtyle of Amelot's tranſlation of father Paul is obſerved by Le Courayer to be un peu paſſé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and ſudden tranſformations of a language ſeldom happen; conqueſts and migrations are now very rare: but there are other cauſes of change, which, though ſlow in their operation, and inviſible in their progreſs, are perhaps as much ſuperiour to human reſiſtance, as the revolutions of the ſky, or intumeſcence of the tide. Commerce, however neceſſary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourſe with ſtrangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themſelves, muſt in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which ſerves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coaſts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouſe, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at laſt incorporated with the current ſpeech.

There are likewiſe internal cauſes equally forcible. The language moſt likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raiſed a little, and but a little, above barbarity, ſecluded from ſtrangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like ſome of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus buſied and unlearned, having only ſuch words as common uſe requires, would perhaps long continue to expreſs the ſame notions by the ſame ſigns. But no ſuch conſtancy can be expected in a people poliſhed by arts, and claſſed by ſubordination, where one part of the community is ſuſtained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Thoſe who have much leiſure to think, will always be enlarging the ſtock of ideas; and every increaſe of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from neceſſity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of ſpeculation, it will ſhift opinions; as any cuſtom is diſuſed, the words that expreſſed it muſt periſh with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate ſpeech in the ſame proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various ſciences a language is amplified, it will be more furniſhed with words deflected from their original ſenſe; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the eccentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the phyſician of ſanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiouſneſs of ſpeech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which ſome words will be preferred, and others degraded; viciſſitudes of faſhion will enforce the uſe of new, or extend the ſignification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current ſenſe: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen muſt at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will, at one time or other, by publick infatuation, riſe into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will uſe them with colloquial licentiouſneſs, confound diſtinction, and forget propriety. As politeneſs increaſes, ſome expreſſions will be conſidered as too groſs and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phraſes are therefore adopted, which muſt, for the ſame reaſons, be in time diſmiſſed. Sprat, in his petty treatiſe on the Engliſh language, allows that new words muſt ſometimes be introduced, but propoſes that none ſhould be ſuffered to become obſolete. But what makes a word obſolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how ſhall it be continued, when it conveys an offenſive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once become unfamiliar by diſuſe, and unpleaſing by unfamiliarity?

There is another cauſe of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the preſent ſtate of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third diſtinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the moſt conſpicuous accompliſhment, is ſkill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haſte and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expreſſions.

The great peſt of ſpeech is frequency of tranſlation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting ſomething of its native idiom; this is the moſt miſchievous and comprehenſive innovation; ſingle words may enter by thouſands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the ſame; but new phraſeology changes much at once; it alters not the ſingle ſtones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy ſhould be eſtabliſhed for the cultivation of our ſtyle, which I, who can never wiſh to ſee dependance multiplied, hope the ſpirit of Engliſh liberty will hinder or deſtroy, let them, inſtead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to ſtop the licence of tranſlators, whoſe idleneſs and ignorance, if it be ſuffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irreſiſtible, what remains but to acquieſce with ſilence, as in the other inſurmountable diſtreſſes of humanity? It remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated:

tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preſerved our conſtitution, let us make ſome ſtruggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology, without a conteſt, to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people ariſes from its authors: whether I ſhall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of Engliſh literature, muſt be left to time: much of my life has been loſt under the preſſures of diſeaſe; much has been trifled away; and much has always been ſpent in proviſion for the day that was paſſing over me; but I ſhall not think my employment uſeleſs or ignoble, if by my aſſiſtance foreign nations, and diſtant ages, gain acceſs to the propagators of knowledge, and underſtand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repoſitories of ſcience, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wiſh, I look with pleaſure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the ſpirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promiſed to myſelf: a few wild blunders, and riſible abſurdities, from which no work of ſuch multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furniſh folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but uſeful diligence will at laſt prevail, and there never can be wanting ſome who diſtinguiſh deſert; who will conſider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, ſince while it is haſtening to publication, ſome words are budding, and ſome falling away; that a whole life cannot be ſpent upon ſyntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be ſufficient; that he, whoſe deſign includes whatever language can expreſs, muſt often ſpeak of what he does not underſtand; that a writer will ſometimes be hurried by eagerneſs to the end, and ſometimes faint with wearineſs under a taſk, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always preſent; that ſudden fits of inadvertency will ſurprize vigilance, ſlight avocations will ſeduce attention, and caſual eclipſes of the mind will darken learning; and that the writer ſhall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yeſterday he knew with intuitive readineſs, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it ſhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewiſe is performed; and though no book was ever ſpared out of tenderneſs to the author, and the world is little ſolicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curioſity to inform it, that the Engliſh Dictionary was written with little aſſiſtance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the ſoft obſcurities of retirement, or under the ſhelter of academick bowers, but amidſt inconvenience and diſtraction, in ſickneſs and in ſorrow. It may repreſs the triumph of malignant criticiſm to obſerve, that if our language is not here fully diſplayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprized in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of ſucceſſive ages, inadequate and deluſive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not ſecure them from the cenſure of Beni, if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been ſpent upon their work, were obliged to change its œconomy, and give their ſecond edition another form, I may ſurely be contented without the praiſe of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of ſolitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moſt of thoſe whom I wiſhed to pleaſe have ſunk into the grave, and ſucceſs and miſcarriage are empty ſounds: I therefore diſmiſs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenſure or from praiſe.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welſh were the firſt poſſeſſors of this iſland, whoſe names are recorded, and are therefore in civil hiſtory always conſidered as the predeceſſors of the preſent inhabitants; yet the deduction of the Engliſh language, from the earlieſt times of which we have any knowledge to its preſent ſtate, requires no mention of them: for we have ſo few words which can, with any probability, be referred to Britiſh roots, that we juſtly regard the Saxons and Welſh as nations totally diſtinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons ſeized this country, they ſuffered the Britains to live among them in a ſtate of vaſſalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble ſervices. But it is ſcarcely poſſible, that a nation, however depreſſed, ſhould have been mixed with another in conſiderable numbers without ſome communication of their tongue, and therefore, it may, with great reaſon, be imagined, that thoſe, who were not ſheltered in the mountains, periſhed by the ſword.

The whole fabrick and ſcheme of the Engliſh language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except thoſe where the Sclavonian is ſpoken. Of theſe languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK,

Anglo-Saxon,	Francick,	Cimbrick,
Dutch	German.	Iſlandick,
Friſick,		Norwegian,
Engliſh,		Swediſh,
		Daniſh.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the goſpels ſomewhat mutilated, which, from the ſilver with which the characters are adorned, is called the ſilver book. It is now preſerved at Upſal, and having been twice publiſhed before, has been lately reprinted at Oxford, under the inſpection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. Whether the diction of this venerable manuſcript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it ſeems however to exhibit the moſt ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race; and the Saxon, which is the original of the preſent Engliſh, was either derived from it, or both have deſcended from ſome common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they firſt entered Britain, cannot now be known. They ſeem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their ſpeech, therefore, having been always curſory and extemporaneous, muſt have been artleſs and unconnected, without any modes of tranſition or involution of clauſes; which abruptneſs and inconnection may be obſerved even in their later writings. This barbarity may be ſuppoſed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leiſure for ſofter ſtudies; nor is there any reaſon for ſuppoſing it abated, till the year 570, when Auguſtine came from Rome to convert them to Chriſtianity. The Chriſtian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and ſo gained, from time to time, ſome knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expreſſing all the ſentiments of a civiliſed people, as

This may perhaps be conſidered as a ſpecimen of the Saxon in its higheſt ſtate of purity, for here are ſcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of

Of the following verſion of the goſpels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conqueſt, and therefore may properly be inſerted here.

Tranſlations ſeldom afford juſt ſpecimens of a language, and leaſt of all thoſe in which a ſcrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, becauſe they retain the phraſeology and ſtructure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the ſame book, being tranſlated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into compariſon with another. For this purpoſe I have placed the Saxon verſion and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in oppoſite columns, becauſe the convenience of eaſy collation ſeems greater than that of regular chronology.

17 And

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and juſtifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and ſtood on the right half of the auter of encenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord: and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfild with the holy goſt yit of his modir wombe.

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And

17 And he ȝæð toforan him on ȝaſte ⁊ Eliaſ mihte. ꝥ he fædena heortan to hyna bearnum ȝecyrre. ⁊ unȝeleaffulle to rihtſiſſa ȝleaffcyſe. Drihtne fulfremed folc ȝe-ȝearwian:

18 Da cæð Zacharias to þam enȝele. Þanun þæt ic þiſ. ic eom nu ealð. and min wiſ on hyre dazum forðeode:

19 Da andſwarode him ſe enȝel. Ic eom Gabriel. ic þe ſtande beforan Gode. and ic eom aſend ðiderr þe ſprecan. ⁊ þe ðiſ bodian.

20 And nu þu birſt ſuriȝende. ⁊ þu ſprecan ne miht oð þone dæȝ þe þar þinȝ ȝefuldæd. forðam þu minum fordum ne ȝelyfdeſt. þa beoð on hyna timan ȝefyllede:

21 And ꝥ folc pær Zacharian ȝe-anbidiȝende. and undrodon ꝥ he on þam temple læt pær:

22 Da he ut-eode ne mihte he him to ſprecan. ⁊ hiȝ oncneopon ꝥ he on þam temple ſume ȝeſihðe ȝeſeah. ⁊ he pær bicnende hym. ⁊ dumb ðuſhpunede:

23 Da pær ȝeforden þa hiſ þenunȝa dazar ȝefyllede pæron. he ſeðe to hiſ huſe:

24 Soðlice æfter dazum Elizabeth hiſ wiſ ȝeeacnode. and heo bediȝlde hiȝ ſiſ monðar. ⁊ cæð.

25 Soðlice me Drihten ȝedyde ðuſ. on þam dazum þe he ȝeſeah minne hoſp betwux mannum aſyrran:

28 Da cæð ſe enȝel inȝanȝende. Dal per þu mid ȝyfe ȝefylled. Drihten mid þe. Ðu eart ȝebleſſud on firum:

29 Da pearið heo on hiſ ſprace ȝedrefed. and þohte hpæt ſeo ȝnetinȝ pære:

30 Da cæð ſe enȝel. Ne ondræd þu ðe Maria. forðlice þu ȝyfe mid Gode ȝemetteſt.

31 Soðlice nu. þu on innode ȝe-eacnaſt. and ſunu cenſt. and hiſ naman Hælend ȝeneminneſt.

32 Se bið mære. ⁊ þær hehſtan ſunu ȝenemned. and him ſylð Drihten God hiſ fæder Dauides ſetl.

33 And he riceð on ecneſſe on Iacobes huſe. ⁊ hiſ riceſ ende ne bið:

34 Da cæð Maria to þam enȝle. hu ȝeſyrð ðiſ. forðam ic pere ne oncnape:

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of juſt men, to make redy a perfyt puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gone fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh bifore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to evangeliſe to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be doumbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, till into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen ge don, for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.

20 And aftir theſe dayes Elizabeth his wif conſeyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reproof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man; whos name was Joſeph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſchalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſchalt clepe his name Jheſus.

28 This ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith his fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the aungel, on what maner ſchal this thing be done? for Y knowe not man.

35 Ða andſpaſode hýſe ſe engel. Se halga Gaſt on þē becýmð. ⁊ þær heahſtan miht ſe oſerſceadað. and ſoſþam þ halige þe of þe acenned bið. bið Godes ſunu genemned.

36 And nu. Elizabeth þin mage ſunu on hýſe ylde geacnode. and þes monað is hýſe ſixta. ſeo is unbeſpende genemned.

37 Foſþam nis ælc ord mid Gode unmihtelic:-

54 Ðe afenð Israhel his cniht. ⁊ gemunde his milð-heortnesſe.

55 Sa ſe wræc to urum fæderum. Abrahame and his sæde on á weorulde:-

56 Soðlice Maria wunude mid hýre wfýlce þrý monðas. ⁊ gewende þa to hýre huſe:-

57 Da wæs gefýlled Elizabethe cenning-tid. and heo sunu cende.

31 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to hir, the holy Goſt ſchal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheſte ſchal ouer ſchadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepide the ſon of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi cosyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the ſixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſible anentis God.

34 and Marye ſeide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haſte into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the hous of Zacarye, and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Goſt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymmen and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

29 And whereof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maad in myn eeris: the young child gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid be thou that haſt beleeved: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be parfytly don.

42 And Marye ſeyde, my ſoul magnifieth the Lord.

43 And my ſpiryt hath gladid in God myn helthe.

44 For he hath behulden the mekeneſſe of his hand-mayden. for lo for this alle generatiouns ſchulen ſeye that I am bleſſid.

45 For he that is mighti hath done to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merſy is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette doun myghty men fro ſeete and enhaunſide meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

50 He havynge mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his childe,

51 As he hath ſpoken to our fadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned again into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

56 And his modir anſweride and ſeide, nay; but he ſchal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei ſeiden to hir, for no man is in thi kyndrede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot ſeyinge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he ſpak and bleſſide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neighbouris, and all the wordis weren pupliſchid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and ſeiden what manner child ſchal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Goſt, and profeciede and ſeide.

64 Bleſſid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has viſitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66 As he ſpak by the mouth of hiſe holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do merſy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy teſtament.

69 The grete ooth that he ſwoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himſelf to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of our enemyes ſerve to him,

71 In holyneſſe and rightwiſneſſe before him, in alle our dayes.

72 And thou child ſchalt be clepid the profete of the higheſte, for thou ſchalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hiſe weyes.

73 To geve ſcience of heelth to his puple into remiſſioun of her ſynnes.

74 By the inwardeneſs of the merſy of oure God, in the which he ſpringyng up fro on high hath viſited us.

75 To geve light to them that ſitten in darkneſſis, and in ſchadowe of deeth, to dreſſe our feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in ſpiryt, and was in deſert placis till to the day of his ſchewing to Yſrael.

Of

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neceſſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The firſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds.

The two paſſages, which I have ſelected, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine anceſtors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered; this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it; the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithſtanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarite, which, poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

And ſuþþe Adelbrýȝt, Kent and Weſtſex.

Ac hii adde alle ýþe affend, ȝýf þe nýȝt madde ý be.

At Sſyrebourne he was ẏbured, & ẏs broþer Adelbrẏȝt
His kẏnedom adde aſter hẏm, as lawe was and rẏȝt.
Bẏ ẏs daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wẏncheſtre al out.
And þat lond folc of Hamteſſyre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and foȝte and þe ſſrewen ouercome.
Adelbrẏȝt was kẏng of Kent ȝeres folle tene,
And of Weſtſex bote vẏue, þo he deẏde ẏch wene.

ADELRED was after hẏm kẏng ẏ mad in þe place,
Eẏȝte hondred & ſeuene & ſẏxtẏ as in þe ȝer of grace.
þe vorſte ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom þe Deneẏs þẏcke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cẏtes vaſte nome.
Maẏſtres hii adde of her oſt, as ẏt were dukes, tueẏe,
Hẏnguar and Hubba, þat ſſrewen were beẏe.
In Eſt Angle hii bẏleuede, to reſt hem as ẏt were,
Mẏd her oſt al þe wynter, of þe vorſt ȝere.

þe kẏng Aldered ſone þo þen weẏ o. [illegible]eþ nome,
As ẏt vel, þe vẏfty ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
At Wẏmbourne he was ẏbured, as God ȝef þat cas, þe gode Alfred, ẏs broþer, after hẏm kẏng was.

ALFRED, þẏs noble man, as in þe ȝer of grace he nom
Eẏȝte hondred & ſẏxtẏ & tuelue þe kẏnedom.
Arſt he adde at Rome ẏbe, &, vor ẏs grete wẏſdom,
þe pope Leon hẏm bleſſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynge's croune of hẏs lond, þat in þẏs lond ȝut ẏs:
And he led hẏm to be kẏng, ar he kẏng were ẏwẏs.
An he was kẏng of Engelond, of alle þat þer come,
þat vorſt þus ẏlad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſuþþe oþer after hẏm of þe erchebẏſſopes echon.
So þat hẏuor hẏm pore kẏng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ ſẏde of Temeſe nẏne bataẏles he nome
Aȝen þe Deneẏs þe vorſt ȝer of ẏs kẏnedom.
Nẏe ȝer he was þus in þẏs lond in bataẏle & in wo,
An oſte ſẏþe aboue was, and bẏneþe oſtor mo;
So longe, þat hẏm nere bẏ leuede bote þre ſlẏren in ẏs hond,
Hamteſſyre, and Wẏlteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ẏs lond.
A daẏ as he werẏ was, and aſuoddi ẏnge hẏm nome
And ys men were ẏwend auẏſſ þ, Seẏn Cutbert to hym com.
" Ich am," he ſeẏde, " Cutbert, to þe ẏcham ẏwend
" To brẏnge þe gode tẏtẏnges. Fram God ẏcham ẏſend.
" Vor þat folc of þẏs lond to ſẏnne her wẏlle al ȝeue,
" And ȝut nolle herto her ſẏnnes bẏleue
" þoru me & oþer halewen, þat in þẏs lond were ẏbore;
" þan vor ȝou bẏddeþ God, wanne we beþ hẏm byuore,
" Hour Louerd mẏd ẏs eẏen of milce on þe lokeþ ſeruore,
" And þẏ poer þe wole ȝẏue aȝen, þat þou aſt neẏ verlore.
" And þat þou þer of ſoþ ẏſe, þou ſſalt abbe tokẏnynge.
" Vor þẏm men, þat beþ ago to daẏ auẏſſẏnge,
" In lepes & in couſles ſo muche vẏſ hii ſſolde hẏm brynge,
" þat ech man wondry ſſal of ſo gret cacchẏnge.
" And þe mor vor þe harde vorſte, þat þe water ẏfrore hẏs,
" þat þe more aȝen þe kunde of vẏſſẏnge ẏt ẏs.
" Of ſerue ẏt wel aȝen God, and ẏlef me ys meſſager,
" And þou ſſall bẏ wẏlle abẏde, as ẏcham ẏtold

Hys kyng herof awoc, and of þys sygte þogte,
Hys vyllares come to hym, & so gret won of sys
hym brogte,
þat wonder yt was, & namelyche vor þe weder was so colde.
þo lyuede þe god man wel, þat Seyn Cutbert adde ytold.
In Deuenysshyre þer after aryuede of Deneys þre and tuenty shypuol men, all agen þe peys, þe kynge's broþer of Denemarch duc of ost was.
Oure kynge's men of Engelond mette hem by cas,
And smyte þer an batayle, and her gret duc slowe,
And eygte hondred & fourty men, & her caronyes to drowe.
þo kyng Alfred hurde þys, ys herte gladede þo,
þat lond folc to hym come so þycke so yt mygte go,
Of Somersete, of Wyltesshyre, of Hamtesshyre þerto,
Euere as he wende, and of ys owe folc al so.
So þat he adde poer ynou, and atte laste hii come,
And a batayle at Edendone agen þe Deneys nome.
And slowe to grounde, & wonne þe maystre of the velde.
þe kyng & ys grete duke bygonne hem to gelde
To þe kyng Alfred to ys wylle, and ostages toke,
Vorto wende out of ys lond, gyf he yt wolde loke;
And gut þerto, vor ys loue, to auonge Cristendom.
Kyng Gurmund, þe hexte kyng, vorst þer to come.
Kyng Alfred ys godfader was. & ybaptyzed ek þer were
þretty of her hexte dukes. and muche of þat folc þere
Kyng Alfred hem huld wyþ hym tuelf dawes as he hende,
And suþþe he gef hem large gyftes, and let hym
wende.
Hii, þat nolde Cristyn be, of lande slowe þo,
And bygonde see in France dude wel muche wo.
gut þe strewen come agen, and muche wo here wrogte.
Ac þe kyng Alfred atte laste to sname hem euere brogte.
Kyng Alfred was þe wyssost kyng, þat long was byuore.
Vor þey me segge þe lawes beþ in worre tyme vorlore,
Nas yt nogt so his daye. vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made rygtuollore, and strengore þan er
were.
Clere he was god ynou, and gut, as me telleþ me,
He was more þan ten ger old, ar he couþe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte smale gyftes hym tok,
Vor to byleue oþer ple, and loky on ys boke.
So þat by por clergye ys rygt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere y mad, to gouerny ys lond.
And vor he worte was so muche of þe luþer Deneys, þe men of þys sulue lond were of þe worse peys.
And robbede and slowe oþere, þeruor he byuonde,
þat þer were hondredes in eche contreye of ys lond,
And in ech toune of þe hondred a teþynge were also,
And þat ech man wyþoute gret lond in teþynge were
ydo,
And þat ech man knewe oþer þat in teþynge were,
And wuste somdel of her þat, gyf me þu vp hem bere.
So streyt he was, þat þey me ledde amydde weyes
heye
Seluer, þat non man ne dorste yt nyme, þey he yt seye.
Abbeys he rerde mony on, and mony studes ywys.
Ac Wynchestrye he rerde on, þat nywe munstre ycluped ys.
Hys lyf eygte and tuenty ger in ys kynedom ylaste.
After ys deþ he wos ybured at Wynchestre atte laste.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men seen another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre apperethe not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode sterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the see ben of rownde schapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament schewethe in o contree, that schewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and sotyle compassement of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myghte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties septemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that azen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: ſo that tho ſterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; ſo that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hath benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men ſeen firſt the ſterre Antartyk. And ſo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that ſterre more highe; ſo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) after goynge be ſee and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have ſpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the ſterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and ſchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee ſcholde have ſeen alle the roundneſſe of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have ſeyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 ſterres: the whiche halfondelle I have ſeyn. And of the other halfondelle, I have ſeyn toward the Northe, undre the Tranſmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have ſeen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have ſeen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and ſo there ne faylethe but that I have ſeen alle the firmament, ſaf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneſſe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: ſo there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And alſo I have ſeen the 3 parties of alle the roundneſſe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I ſeye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and ſchippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he ſcholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ſtreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the Tranſmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn undre us, ben feet azenſt feet. For alle the parties of ſee and of lond han here appoſitees, habitables or trepaſſables, and thei of this halt and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preſtre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jeruſalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Weſt: and the lond of Preſtre [illegible] partie of the erthe, toward the [illegible] there the day, whan wee have t[illegible] alſo highe to the contrarie, thei han t[illegible]te, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the ſee ben of round forme and ſchapp, as I have ſeyd beforn. And than that men gon upward to o coſt, men gon dounward to another coſt. Alſo zee have herd me ſeye, that Jeruſalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and ſchewen there, be a ſpere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that ſchewethe no ſchadwe on no ſyde. And that it ſcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneſſethe it in the Pſautre, where he ſeythe, Deus operatus eſt ſalutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weſt, for to go toward Jeruſalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jeruſalem, unto other confynyes of the ſuperficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed ſometyme from oure contrees, for to go ſerche the world. And ſo he paſſed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and ſo longe he wente be ſee and lond, and ſo enviround the world be many ſeyſons, that he fond an yle, where he herde ſpeke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, ſuche wordes as men ſpeken to beſtes in his own contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I ſeye, that he had gon ſo longe, be londe and be ſee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to ſeye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paſſed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and ſo he loſte moche peynefulle labour, as him ſelf ſeyde, a gret while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and the tempeſt of the ſee toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd ſpeke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was poſſible thinge. But how it ſemethe to ſymple men unlerned, that men mowe not go undre the erthe, and alſo that men ſcholde falle towarde the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon leſſe, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle,

ouder aboven or benethen, it ſemethe alweyes to hem, that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it ſemethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte ſo it ſemethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere reſoun, the erthe and the ſee, that ben ſo grete and ſo hevy, ſcholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore ſeithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui ſuſpendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be poſſible thing, that men may ſo envyronne alle the world, natheles of a 1000 perſones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde reyde him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundneſſe and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the old wiſe aſtronomeres. And here ſeyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lytylle wyt, it ſemethe me, ſavynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere underſtondynge, I ſeye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compaſs deviſed be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; ſo that in as many parties, as the grete compas ſchal be departed, in als manye, ſchalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the ſpaces ben leſſe. Now thanne, be the gret compas repreſented for the firmament, and the litille compas repreſented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyſed, be aſtronomeres, in 12 ſignes; and every ſigne is devyſed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Alſo, be the erthe devyſed in als many parties, as the firmament; and let every partye anſwere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of aſtronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe anſweren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 8 myles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 ſithes; and then thei ben 315000 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundneſſe, and of heghte enviroun, aftre myn opynyoun and myn understondynge. And zee ſchulle undirſtonde, that aftre the opynyoun of olde wiſe philoſophres and aſtronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles coſtynge to hem, ne ben not in the ſuperficyalte cownted aboven the erthe as it ſchewethe be alle the bokes of aſtronomye. For the ſuperficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben deſcendynge toward the Weſt. And alſo thoſe yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenſt us, beth noght reckned in the clymates: for thei ben azenſt us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates ſtrecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveſeyd, (alle thoughe I bē unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and paſſed the ſee, the zeer of grace 1322. that have paſſed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle ſtraunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myſelf, for myn unable inſuffiſance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my ſelf) to reſte: for gowtes, artetykes, that me diſtreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenſt my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge ſolace in my wrecched reſte, recordynge the tyme paſſed, I have fulfilled theiſe thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it pleſe hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I ſchalle preye for hem. And alle tho that ſeyn for me a Pater noſter, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my ſynnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his pleſance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I ſchalle do unto my lyſes ende. And I beſeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godeneſſe and grace comethe fro, that he vouchesaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire ſoules with inſpiracioun of the Holy Goſt, in makynge defence of alle hire goſtly enemyes here in erthe, to hire ſalvacioun, bothe of body and ſoule; to worſchipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret; that in alle places is preſent, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodneſſe may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The firſt of our authors, who can be properly ſaid to have written Engliſh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confeſſion of a Lover, calls Chaucer his diſciple, and may therefore be conſidered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to ſpeke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Whiche hath befalle in ſondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All ſodeinly, er it be wiſt,
A tunne, when his lie ariſt
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els ſhulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell ſkare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the ſtreme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it ſhall reſtreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wiſe, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miſwent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in ſondrie wiſe:
But what man wolde him ſelfe amiſe
His conſcience, and nought miſuſe,
He maie well at the firſt excuſe
His god, whiche euer ſtant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So muſt it ſtand vpon vs ſelue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cauſe of that ſhall fall.

Heres hore aren ſhad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the ſlacke ſkinne trembleth of miine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be ſwete, but cometh

The hiſtory of our language is [illegible] point at which the hiſtory of [illegible] ſuppoſed to commence, the [illegible] luſtrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may, per[illegible] with great juſtice, be ſtiled the firſt of our verſifiers who wrote poetically. He does not, however, appear to have deſerved all the praiſe which he has received, or all the cenſure that he has ſuffered. Dryden, who, miſtaking genius for learning, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, aſcribes to Chaucer the firſt refinement of our numbers, the firſt production of eaſy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more poliſhed languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harſh terms for having vitiated his native ſpeech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find ſmooth numbers and eaſy rhymes, of which Chaucer is ſuppoſed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does not allow us to diſcover with particular exactneſs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate ſufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and ſome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various diſpoſitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he ſeems to have been happy and judicious. I have ſelected ſeveral ſpecimens both of his proſe and verſe; and among them, part of his tranſlation of Boetius, to which another verſion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppoſed. It would be improper to quote very ſparingly an author of ſo much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book ſo generally known.

COLVILE.

I THAT in tyme of proſperite, and floryſhing ſtudye, made pleaſaunte and delectable ditties, or verſes: alas now beyng heauy and ſad ouerthrowen in aduerſitie, am compelled to fele and taſte heumes and greif. Beholde the muſes Poeticall, that is to ſaye: the pleaſure that is in poetes verſes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ theſe verſes in meter, and the ſorowfull verſes do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yſſuinge out of my eyes for ſorowe. Whiche muſes no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or baniſhment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and luſty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the courſe of ſorowfull olde age cauſeth me to reioyſe. For haſty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how deſe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortuſe unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the deth, had almoſte drente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or wheseto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degre.

IN the mene while, that I ſtill record theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I ſaugh ſtondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by ſemblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with ſoche vigour and ſtrength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it ſo, that ſhe were full of ſo grete age, that menne wouldeu not trowen in no manere, that ſhe were of our elde.

The ſtature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for ſometyme ſhe conſtrained and ſhronke her ſelven, like to the common meſure of menne: And ſometyme it ſemed, that ſhe touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when ſhe hove her hedde [illegible] perced the ſelf heven, ſo that the ſight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and ſubtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes ſhe had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her ſelf declaryng, and ſhewyng to me the [illegible] The whiche clothes a darkneſſe of a forletan and [illegible] with al her inconmodities and euyls, and ſorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the ſame old age, that is to ſay: that ſorowe cauſeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled ſkynne trembleth my fleſh, cleane conſumed and waſte with ſorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luſtye, and in pleaſure or welth: but in time of aduerſitie, when it is often deſyred. Alas Alas how dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in miſery that would fayne dye: and yet refuſythe to come and ſhutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falſe fortune fauoryd me with her tranſitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almoſt ouercome me. That is to ſay deathe was redy to oppreſſe me when I was in proſperitie. Nowe for by cauſe that fortune beynge turned, from proſperitie into aduerſitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you ſo often boſted me, ſayinge that I was happy when I had honour poſſeſſions riches, and authoritie whych be tranſitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no ſtedefaſt degre.

WHYLES that I conſiderydde pryuylye with my ſelfe the thynges before ſayd, and deſcrybed my woſull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I ſawe a woman ſtand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glyſteryng clere eye, aboue the common ſorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of ſtrength, although ſhe ſemed ſo olde that by no meanes ſhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ſtature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe ſhe ſhewethe herſelfe at the commen length or ſtatur of men, and other whiles ſhe ſemeth ſo high, as though ſhe touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when ſhe wold ſtretch fourth her hed hygher, it alſo perced thorough heauen, ſo that mens ſyghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her veſtures or cloths were perfyt of the finyſte thredes, and ſubtyll workemanſhyp, and of ſubſtaunce permanent, whych veſtures ſhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne layynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veſtures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorāunce of olde̅es forgotten hadde obſcuryd and lettres there were ſeen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereſt letter to the upperest: natheleſſe handes of ſome men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by ſtrength, and everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie ſoche peces, as he might getten. And forſothe this forſaied woman bare finale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand ſhe bare a ſcepter. And when ſhe ſawe theſe Poeticall muſes approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, ſhe was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (q'ſ ſhe) hath ſuffered approchen to this ſike manne theſe commen ſtrompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne aſſwagen not his ſorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and noriſhe hym with ſwete venime? Forſothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, diſtroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reſon. For thei holden hertes of men in uſage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muſes had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well ſuffre the laſſe grevouſly. For why, in ſoche an unprofitable man myn ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nouriſhed in my ſtudies or ſcoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben ſwete, till it be at the laſt, and ſuffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muſes, that is to ſay, by my notefull ſciences. And thus this companie of muſes iblamed caſten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and ſhewing by redneſſe ther ſhame, thei paſſeden ſorowfully the threſholde. And I of whom the ſight plounged in teres was darked, ſo that I ne might not know what that woman was, of ſo Imperial auctoritie, I woxe all abaſhed and ſtonied, and caſt my ſight doune to the yerth, and began ſtill for to abide what ſhe would doen afterward. Then came ſhe nere, and ſet her doune upon the uttereſt corner of my bed, and ſhe beholdyng my chere, that was caſt to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with theſe wordes (that I ſhall ſaine) the perturbacion of my thought.

ſayd letters were ſene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a paſſage or waye in ſteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderſtand from practys or actyf, unto the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderſtand ſpeculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of ſome vyolente perſones had cut the ſayde veſtures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, ſuch as euery one coulde catch. And ſhe her ſelfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her leſte hande a ſcepter, which foreſayd philoſophy (when ſhe ſaw the muſes poetycal preſent at my bed, ſpekyng ſorowfull wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry ſayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who ſuffred theſe crafty harlottes to com to thys ſycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increaſe the ſame with ſwete poyſon. Theſe be they that doo dyſtroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reaſon and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accuſtome or ſubdue mens myndes with ſickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the ſame. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen ſorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke ſhould not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the ſtudyes of Ariſtotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence maremaids (that ſeme ſwete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and ſuffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muſes or ſcyences that be holſome and good. And after that philoſophy had ſpoken theſe wordes the ſayd companye of the muſys poeticall beyng rebukyd and ſad, caſte down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by bluſſyng confeſſed their ſhamfaſtnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my ſyght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, ſo that I knew not what woman this was hauing ſoo great auctoritie, was amaſyd or aſtonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng ſhe would ſaye ferther, then ſhe had ſaid. Then ſhe approching and drawynge nere vnto me, ſat downe vpon the vttermoſt part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face ſad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for ſorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth theſe ſayinges folowynge.

The concluſions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his ſon in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) ſtandeth ſo good at this day, eſpecially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, ſays an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my ſonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne ſcyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and alſo well conſydre I thy beſye prayer in eſpecyal to lerne the tretyſe of the aſtrolabye. Than for as moche as a philoſopher ſaithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiſcendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a ſufficient aſtrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretiſe, I purpoſe to teche the a certaine nombre of concluſions, pertainynge to this ſame inſtrument. I ſay a certaine nombre of concluſions for thre cauſes, the firſt cauſe is this. Truſte wel that al the concluſions that have be founden, or ells poſſiblye might be founde in ſo noble an inſtrument as in the aſtrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I ſuppoſe. Another cauſe is this, that ſothely in any cartes of the aſtrolabye that I have yſene, ther ben ſome concluſions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther beheſtes: and ſome of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretiſe divided in five partes, wil I ſhewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Engliſhe, for Latine ne canſt thou nat yet but ſmale, my litel ſonne. But nevertheleſſe ſuffiſeth to the theſe trewe concluſyons in Engliſhe, as wel as ſuffiſeth to theſe noble clerkes grekes theſe ſame concluſyons in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke hed 'hem firſte out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to ſaine in Latine.

And God wote that in all theſe langages and in manye mo, have theſe concluſyons ben ſufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every perſon diſcrete, that redeth or bereth this litel tretiſe, to have me deme in this caſe as I am nyce, and the more unkonning, that they fynde fawte in the lenger the better, for ſothe it is my entente to have written it full trewly, as I couthe after the doctrine, and the conning that God hath lent me. Prey I mekely every man that I am recommended to my lorde Sanctus, and alſo to my lorde Cardinal, for whom that I dyde ſomwhat lenger on this werke, and alſo to my maiſtreſſe the Quene, and to alle hire children, and to my lorde the Archebiſhop, and to my lorde of Canterbury, and to my lorde of Excetre, and to my lorde of Bathe, and to my lorde of Duresme, and to my lorde of Bedforde, and to my lorde of Rochiſtre, and to my lorde of Seint Aſaphe, and to my lorde of Chicheſtre, and to my lorde of Landaffe, and to my lorde of Seint Davies, and to my lorde of Bangor, and to my lorde of Seint Assyse, and to my lorde of Worceſtre, and to my lorde of Hereforde, and to my lorde of Lincolne, and to my lorde of Norwiche, and to my lorde of Ely, and to my lorde of Chicheſtre, and to my lorde of Coventre and Lychefelde, and to my lorde of Exonie ward the ſyght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the firſt leudneſſe. So ſothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayſe, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudeneſſe commendeth. Eke it ſhal yeve ſight that other precyous thynges ſhall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many ſoveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben ſome that ſpeken ther poiſye mater in Frenche, of whiche ſpeche the Frenche men have as gode a fantaſye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Engliſhe. And many termes there ben in Englyſhe, whiche unneth we Engliſhe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe ſhould than a Frenche man borne? ſoche termes connejumpere in this matter, but as the jay chatereth Engliſhe. Right ſo truely the underſtandyn of Engliſhmen woll not ſtretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what ſo ever we boſten of ſtraunge langage. Let then clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of ſcience, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche alſo enditen ther queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us ſhewe our fantaſies in ſuch wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudneſſe in travaile, yet ſoch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben neceſſarie; for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour ſene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to eſchue perils, and neceſſaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or perſons.

Certes the ſoverainſt thinge of deſire and moſt creture reſonable, have or els ſhuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unreſonable beſtes mowen not, ſithe reſon hath in 'hem no workinge: than reſonable that wol not, is compariioned to unreſonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forſothe the moſt ſoveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a ſothe, without any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to bringe in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the conſideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, underſtandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unſene pryvities of God made to us ſyghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and underſtondinge. Thele thinges than forſothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge ſothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David ſaith: thou haſte that he he cometh not in yeres that be iwere, but cometh de Animalibus, ſaith to naturell philoſophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and alſo in knowinge of cauſes in kindelye thynges, conſidrid forſothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the ſhap, a gret kyndely love we ſhulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is ſhewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philoſophers with a lyvely ſtudie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret ſwet and travaille to us leften of cauſes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philoſophers it was more joy, more lykinge, mere herty luſt in kindely vertues and matters of reſon the perfeccion by buſy ſtudy to knowe, than to have had all the treſour, al the richeſſe, al the vaine glory, that the paſſed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to ſaine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke preſſed that ſoch godenes hated. And bicauſe this boke ſhall be of love, and the prime cauſes of ſtering in that doinge with paſſions and diſeles for wantinge of deſire, I wil that this boke be cleped the teſtament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in ſcorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, ſay he will rende out the ſwerde of Hercules handes, and alſo he ſhulde let Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of ſtrength to pull up the ſpere, that Alliander the noble might never wagge, and that padinge al thinge to ben maſter of Frannce by might, there as the noble gracious conquerour the dirde for al his grete proweſſe in armes he might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote wel. Our liall be made more ſcorne and ſpe of me, that I ſo unworthiely clothed altogither in the clouſie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to ſpeke of love, or els of the cauſes in that matter, ſithen al the gretteſt clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who ſaith gathered up clene to-rorne 'hem, and with ther ſharp ſithes of conning al mow'n and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forſothe commendeth noughte his reſon, that he hath in hain, be it never ſo trolly. And although theſe noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the ſheves, and made many ſhockes, yet have I enſample to gader the ſmale crommes, and fulli... ma walet of tho that fallen from the bourde among the ſmalle houndes, notwithſtanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remiſſules, as trenchours, and the relefe to grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the ſhedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encreſe my porcion with that I ſhal drawe by privyties out of ſhockes; a ſlye ſervaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in cauſes of thynges, was more hardier in the firſte ſechers, and ſo ſayth Ariſtotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther paſſing ſtudy han freſhed our wittes, and oure underſtandynge han excited in conſideracion of trouth by ſharpenes of ther reſons. Utterly theſe thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lifelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of meſure was boiſtous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind aſketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean ſe ſo to ariſe unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to ſpill all the erthe.

The Prologues of the Canterbury Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his ſhouris ſote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in ſuch licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his ſwetè breth
Enſpirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And ſmalè foulis makin melodye,
That ſlepin allè night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to ſekin ſtrangè ſtrondes,
To ſervin hallowes couth in ſondry londes:
And ſpecially fro every ſhir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy blisfull martyr for to ſeke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were ſeke.
Befell that in that ſeſon on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoſtery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of ſundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaſhip; and pilgrimes wer they all:
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the ſtablis werin wide,
And well we werin eſid at the beſt:
And ſhortly whan the ſunnè was to-reſt,
So had I ſpokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaſhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to riſe,
To take our weye, ther as I did deviſe.
But nathleſs while that I have time and ſpace,
Er' that I farther in this tale pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reſon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, ſo as it ſemid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I firſt begin.

The Knight.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he firſt began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curteſy.
Full worthy was he in his lordis werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Chriſtendom, as in Hethenes;
And evyr honoured for his worthines.
At Aleſſandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Chriſten-man ſo oft of his degree
In Granada; in the ſege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis war he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete ſee
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Trameſene,
In liſtis thrys, and alwey ſlein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight hath ben alſo
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a ſov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wiſe;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no villany ne ſaid
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay;
Of fuſtian he werid a gipon,
Allè beſmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

The House of FAME.

The Firſt Boke.

NOW herken, as I have you ſaied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,

Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aſlepè wordir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè miles two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lith that erſt was harde.
But as me ſlept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ſtandyng in ſondrie ſtages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.
But certainly I n'ist nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yſletyng in a ſe,
And alſo on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alſo the man,
That firſt came through his deſtine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie' anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.
Firſt ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all their joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polites his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that ſawe I howe Venus,
When that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doune from hevin ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Æneas flie,
And how he fled, and how that he
Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchiſes,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchiſes in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then ſawe I next that all in fere
How Creuſa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Julo,
And eke Aſcanius alſo,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creüſa was iloſte, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her fought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaied he muſt into Itaile,
As was his deſtinie, ſauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her ſpirite gan appere,
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaied,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.
There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè
With his ſhippis began to ſaile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ſtreight as ere thei mightin go.
There ſawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haſt ihated all thy life
Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhould ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of their ſalvacion.
There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That every herte might agriſe,
To ſe it paintid on the wall.
There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

Gode

Gode counſaile of Chaucer.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe,
Suffiſe unto the gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and chmbyng tikilneſſe,
Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
Savour no more then the behovin ſhall,
Rede well thy ſelf, that othir folke canſt rede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.

Painè the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
In truſt of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
Demith thy ſelf that demiſt othir's dede,
And trouthe the ſhall deliver it 'is no drede.

That the is ſent receve in buxomeneſſe;
The wraſtlyng of this worlde aſkith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirneſſe,
Forthe pilgrim, forthe o beſt out of thy ſtall,
Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
Weivith thy luſte and let thy ghoſt the lede,
And trouthe the ſhall delivir, it 'is no drede.

Balade of the village without paintyng.

THIS wretchid world'is tranſmutacion
As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordu or due diſcrecion
Govirnid is by fortun'is errour,
But nathèleſſe the lacke of her favour
Ne maie not doe me lyng though that I die,
J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur
For finally fortune I doe defie.

Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
But truily no force of thy reddour
To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
For finally fortune I do defie.

O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddiſt her oppreſſion,
Ne in her cnere foundin thou no favour,
Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
I knowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour.
For finally fortune I do defie.

The anſwere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why faieſt thou then I am to the ſo kene,
That hath thyſelf out of my govirnaunce?
Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
That thou haſt lente me, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
What woſt thou yet how I the will avaunce?
And eke thou haſt thy beſte frende alive.

I have the taught diviſion bitwene
Frende of effecte, and frende of countenaunce,
The nedith not the gallè of an hine,
That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
Yet holt thine anker, and thou maiſt arrive
There bountie bereth the key of my ſubſtaunce,
And eke thou haſte thy beſtè frende alive.

How many have I refuſed to ſuſtene,
Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtatute on thy queene,
That I ſhall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
About this whele with othir muſt thou drive
My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adverſitie,
My frend maiſt thou not revin blind goddeſſe,
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
Take 'hem again, let 'hem gon lie a preſſe,
The nigardis in kepyng ther richeſſe
Pronoſtike is thou wolt ther toure aſſaile,
Wicke appetite cometh aie before ſickeneſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchiſt at my mutabilitie,
For I the lent a droppe of my richeſſe,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
Why ſhouldiſt thou my roialtie oppreſſe?
The ſe maie ebbe and flowin more and leſſe,
The welkin hath might to ſhine, rain, and haile,
Right ſo muſt I kithin my brotilneſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majeſtie,
That all purveighith of his rightwiſeneſſe,
That famè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
Ye blindè beſtis full of ſeudèneſs!
The heven hath propirtie of ſikirneſs,
This worldè hath evir reſtleſſe travaile,
The laſt daie is the ende of myne entreſſe,
In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
And if ye liſte releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleneſſe
That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attain.

Lydgate

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of The Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are ſelected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on ſoote,
And hath none horſe to releue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may finde no bote
Of wel cold whan thruſt doth hym aſſayle,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym auayle,
Tight ſo fare I which in my buſineſſe,
No ſuccour fynde my rudenes to redreſſe.
I meane as thus, I haue no freſh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no floure,
In my labour for to refreſh me:
Nor of the ſuſters in noumber thriſe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaſo dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel.
Nor of theyr ſpringes clere and chriſtaline,
That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegaſe,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr ſtreme of ſo great ſcarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with ſome drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.
Our life here ſhort of wit the great dulnes
The heuy ſoule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glaſyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a ſtrong batail
With werines my ſpirite to aſſayle,
And with their ſubtil creping in moſt queint
Hath made my ſpirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my ſtepmother called obliuion,
Hath a baſtyll of foryetfulnes,
To ſtoppe the paſſage, and ſhadow my reaſon
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In tranſlating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I ſet and ſtode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer liſt to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me conſtrayne,
Bochas taccompliſh for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to reſt I durſt not procede.

Forteſcue was chief juſtice of the Common Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewkeſbury, and probably wrote moſt of his works in his privacy. The following paſſage is ſelected from his book of The Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by ſome men, why one Realme is a Lordſhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordſchip, Royall and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; ſythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aſtate.

To this dowte it may be anſweryd in this manner; The firſt Inſtitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cauſe of this diverſyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firſt Realme, and ſubduyd it to hymſelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accompliſhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreſſyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robuſtus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beſte for to ſcle and eate hym; ſo Nembroth ſubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their ſervice and their goods, uſing upon them the Lordſchip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firſt a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then moſt reſemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Cryſtyn Princes uſen the ſame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys ſayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I ſuppoſe firſt beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more manſuete, and better diſpoſyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Feliſhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philoſopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muſt needs have an Heed; than they choſe the ſame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inſtitution, and onyng of themſelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the ſame Realme ſo to be rulyd and juſtyfyd by ſuch Lawys, as they al would aſſent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycauſe it is mynyſtrid by a Kyng, it is callid

Regale.

Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quaſi Regimen, plurium Scientia, ſive Conſilio miniſtratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus ſaith, in his Boke de priſcis Hiſtoriis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the ſame Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Aſſent of his People. And in like forme as he ſaith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alſo the more parte of al the Realmys in Aſrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordſhip, the ſayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayſith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more ſewerly do Juſtice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alſo good for his People that receyve therby, ſuch Juſtice as they deſyer themſelf. Now as me ſeymth, it ys ſhewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and the other beganne, by the Deſier and Inſtitution of the People of the ſame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceſſary to give a larger ſpecimen, both becauſe our language was then in a great degree formed and ſettled, and becauſe it appears from Ben Jonſon, that his works were conſidered as models of pure and elegant ſtyle. The tale, which is placed firſt, becauſe earlieſt written, will ſhow what an attentive reader will, in peruſing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffuſed among thoſe claſſes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has ſuffered very little change. There is another reaſon why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better truſted than any other edition of the Engliſh books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry ieſt how a ſergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiſter Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and ſay,
That beſt is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The buſines that he can,
And in no wyſe,
To enterpryſe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no ſkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hoſiers crafte,
And falleth to making ſhone,
The ſmythe that ſhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng ſcole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene ſhall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyſſe the cup,
With her phiſick,
Wil kepe on ſicke,
Tyll ſhe have ſouſed hym vp.

A man of lawe,
That neuer ſawe,
The wayes to bye and ſell,
Wenyng to ryſe,
By marchaundiſe,
I wiſh to ſpede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo ſeke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in ſute,
Tyll he diſpute,
His money cleane away,
Pletyng the lawe,
For euery ſtrawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and ſtriſe,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go ſmatter
In philoſophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
In theology,
All that enſue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue ſo farre a caſt,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Beſhrewe themſelfe at laſt.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
Here by a ſergeaunt late,
That thriftly [illegible]
Or he coulde [illegible]
Rapped ab[illegible],
Whyle that he [illegible]
See how he coulde
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye ſhall here.
It happed ſo,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
That had he layd a ſide:
His ſonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to ſuffiſe
His chylde, well thriſe,
That money was to ſmal.
Yet or this day
I have hard ſay,
That many a man certeſſe,
Hath with good caſt,
Be ryche at laſt,
That hath begonne with leſſe.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
To ſee it was a joy,

For left ſum blaſt,
Myght ouer caſt,
His ſhip, or by miſchaunce,
Men with ſum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And miniſh his ſubſtaunce,
For to put out,
All maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
Firſt fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetouſly,
He ſu[illegible]re vp,
In his o[illegible],
He thoug[illegible],
His money to encloſe,
Then wiſt he well,
What euer fell,
He coulde it neuer loſe.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundiſe:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyſe.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he ſpent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miſcontent.
With luſty ſporte,
And with reſort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had ſworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And ſo was he,
For ſuch degre,
He gat and ſuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A ſergeaunt well and fayre,
Was redy ſtrayte,
On him to wayte,
As ſone as on the mayre.
But he doubtleſſe,
Of his mekeneſſe,
Hated ſuch pompe and pride,
And would not go,
Companied ſo,
But drewe himſelf a ſide,
To ſaint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
There would he nedes abyde.
There ſpent he faſt,
Till all were paſt,
And to him came there meny,
To aſke theyr debt,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With viſage ſtout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was fayne,
To lay his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wiſt not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So ſick alway,
He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchaunt man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
That gan enquere,
What him was beſt to do.
And he anſwerde,
Be not aferde,
Take an accion therfore,
I you beheſte,
I ſhall hym reſte,
And than care for no more.
I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out,
The ſergeaunt ſaid,
Be not afrayd,
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He ſpake and looked,
So religiouſly.
Yet in a glaſſe,
Or he would paſſe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his ſyde,
To ſee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten ſhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And ſoftely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked:
And a damſell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere ſayd,
Good ſpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
It is told me:
Well ſyr quod ſhe,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he mayſtreſſe,
No harm doutleſſe:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne ſpeake would I.
Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
He is ſo ſike,
Ye be not lyke,
To ſpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my deſire,

Voucheſafe

Voucheſafe to do,
As go hym to,
And ſay an auſten frere
Would with hym ſpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod ſhe I wyll,
Stonde ye here ſtyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is ſhe go,
And told hym ſo,
As ſhe was bode to ſay,
He miſtruſtyng,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And fetch him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,
Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiouſly and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than ſayd,
Ye be diſmayd,
With trouble I underſtande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is.
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet ſhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that,
Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaunt ſayd,
No ſay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full ſore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reſt the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou ſhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeſt not hence,
For all the penſe
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horſon theſe,
With a miſchefe,
Who hath taught thee thy good.
And with his fiſt,
Vpon the lyſt,
He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoſt in ſowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,
Till with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere toke harte,
And vp he ſtarte,
And well he layde about,
And ſo there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a luſty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And claue togyder faſt,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
They fell downe bothe at laſt.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a ſadde ſtroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a poke.
So long aboue,
They heue and ſhoue,
Togider that at laſt,
The mayd and wyfe,
To breake the ſtrife,
Hyed them vpward faſt.
And whan they ſpye,
The captaynes lye,
Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
With a great batyldore.
The wyfe came yet,
And with her fete,
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a ſwappe,
Tyll he was full nygh ſlayne.
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
Hedlyng a long the ſtayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And ſayde adewe,
Commende us to the mayre.
The frere aroſe,
But I ſuppoſe,
Amaſed was his hed,
He ſhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
He thought hym well yſled.
Quod he now loſt,
Is all this coſt,
We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That cauſed me,
To make my ſelf a frere.
Now maſters all,
Here now I ſhall,
Ende there as I began,
In any wyſe,
I would auyſe,
And counſayle euery man,
His owne craft vſe,
All newe refuſe,
And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (writen by maſter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Eliſabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the ſeuenth, and the eldeſt doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Eliſabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the ſeuenth.

O YE that put your truſt and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle proſperite,
That ſo lyue here as ye ſhould neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Enſaumple I thynke there may no better be.
Your ſelfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleaſaunt thyng?
Merciſull god this is a ſtraunge reckenyng:
Rycheſſe, honour, welth, and aunceſtry,
Hath me forſaken and lo now here I ly.
If worſhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me ſaued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meſſangere,
Obey we muſt there is no remedy,
Me hath he ſommoned, and lo now here I ly.
Yet was I late promiſed otherwyſe,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandiſhyng promyſe,
O falſe aſtrology and deuynatrice,
Of goddes ſecretes makyng thy ſelfe ſo wyſe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet laſteth, and lo now here I ly.
O bryttil welth, as full of bitterneſſe,
Thy ſingle pleaſure doubled is with payne.
Account my ſorow firſt and my diſtreſſe,
In ſondry wyſe, and recken there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare ſayne,
For all my honour endured yet haue I,
More wo than welth, and lo now here I ly.
Where are our caſtels, now where are our towers,
Goodly Rychmonde ſone art thou gone from me,
At Weſtminſter that coſtly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now ſhall I neuer ſee.
Almighty god vouchesafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.
Adew myne owne dere ſpouſe my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peaſable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane reſyne,
To be beſtowed vppon your children and myne.
Erſt wer you father, and now muſt ye ſupply,
The mo[illegible]part alſo, for lo now here I ly.
Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye ſhould go where we ſhould ſeldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaſt feare, full oft it is moſt nye,
From you depart I fyrſt, and lo now here I ly.
Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your ſon[illegible] and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld ſo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my ſoule, for lo now here I ly.
Adew lord Henry my louyng ſonne adew.
Our lorde encreaſe your honour and eſtate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyſe and fortunate.
Adew ſwete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou ſhalt ſwete babe ſuche is thy deſteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
Lady Cicyly Anne and Katheryne,
Farewell my welbeloved ſiſters three,
O lady Briget other ſiſter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.
A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all,
A dew my faithful ſeruauntes euerych one,
A dew my commons whom I neuer ſhall,
See in this world wherfore to the alone,
Immortall god verely three and one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy ſeruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in Engliſh written by maſter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauſed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eſtate power and auctorite,
If ye ne know, enſerche and ye ſhall ſpye,
That richeſſe, worſhip, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, reſt, and peace, and all thyng tynally,
That any pleaſure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and ſuſtinaunce,
Is all at my deuyſe and ordinaunce.
Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at laſt,
To good concluſion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpoſe, bounden ſure and faſt
With wiſe prouiſion, I haue ouercaſt.
Without good happe there may no wit ſuffiſe.
Better is to be fortunate than wyſe.

And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my diſprayſe. And other cauſe there nys,
But for me liſt not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forſoke,
The pleaſaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in diſtreſſe,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.
But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how bliſt condicion ſtandeth he:
Him ſelf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may forther and increaſe,
A region hole in ioyfull reſt and peace.
Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and miſchaunce,
Liſt for to liue, and wyll him ſelfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that art prowde of honour ſhape or kynne,
That hepeſt vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
Thy fingers ſhrined with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
With freſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
And weneſt to haue fortune at thy pleaſure,
Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and ſhe ſmileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any ſerpent ſhe beginneth to ſwell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.
Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and ſo blynde)
As ſoone as Fortune liſt to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenaunce and diſceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
Lyke ſwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
On whiche the mated people gaſe and ſtare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treaſure and wayeryng rycheſſe,
Prowdly ſhe houeth as lady and empreſſe.
Faſt by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
Pale fere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
Diſdayn and hatred on the other hand,
Eke reſtles watche fro ſlepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowſy and lokyng as he ſlept.
Before her ſtandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He aſketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not ſo he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye ſee diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnſtable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
Not to all men, as commeth ſonne or dewe,
But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.
And yet her brotell giftes long may not laſt.
He that ſhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirlth about and pluckth away as faſt,
And geueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vſeth to geue and take, and ſlily toſſe,
One man to wynnyng of an others loſſe.
And when ſhe robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full ſore.
But he that receueth it, on that other ſyde,
Is glad, and bleſſth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her gifres to,
And he her curſeth, as other fooles do.
Alas the folyſh people can not ceaſe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, beſely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.
That may ſet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faſt: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherſe.
Thus double fortune, when ſhe lyſt reuerſe
Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the duſt.
She ſodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And ſodeynly miſcheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,
In ſtede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,
She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.

In chaungyng of her cᵩurſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,
Vp ſtartth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.
This is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght.
Great boſte ſhe maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.
Faſt by her ſtandeth the wyſe Socrates,
Arriſtippus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe,
Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſonne
Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.
With her is Byas, whoſe countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes ſtode ſo in dout,
That eche man haſtely gan to cary thence,
And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leeſe.
Heraclitus eke, lyſt felowſhip to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus alſo:
Of which the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,
To ſee how thick the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.
That other laugheth to ſee the foolyſh apes,
How earneſtly they walk about theyr capes.
Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,
Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,
Baniſhing cleane all other ſurpluſage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good ſo fayne.
But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande folde,
The ſecrete draughtes of nature to beholde.
Set fortunes ſervauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full,
That one in ſuretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyſt to aduiſe them bothe, parceyue he ſhall,
As great difference between them as we ſee,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite.
Nowe haue I ſhewed you bothe: thēſe whiche ye lyſt,
Boldely fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to ſay, nowe lyeth it in your fyſt,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleaſe,
If that ye thynke your ſelfe to well at eaſe.
And fyrſt vppon the louely ſhall ſhe ſmile,
And frendly on the caſt her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradiſe:
And fourth with all what ſo thou lyſt deuiſe,
She wyll the grant it liberally perhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure ſure:
Ye may in clowds as eaſily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cauſe fiſhes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to ſpare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine ſtable,
That of her nature is euer variable.
Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any ſeruaunt may,
And in concluſion, that thou ſhalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy ſervyce I dare ſay.
And looke yet what ſhe geueth the to day,
With labour wonne ſhe ſhall happly to morow
Plucke it agayne out of thyne hand with ſorow.
Wherefore yf thou in ſuretye lyſt to ſtande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayſt thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.
But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treaſure,
Truſt not therein, and ſpende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meaſure.
Bylde not thyne houſe on heyth vp in the ſkye.
Nonne falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye.
Remember nature ſent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that ſeke Fortune.

WHO ſo delyteth to prouen and aſſay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunſwere pleaſe you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to truſt, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fiſt,
She renneth looſe, and turneth where ſhe lyſt.
The rollyng dyſe in whome your lucke doth ſtande,
With whoſe vnhappy chaunce ye be ſo wroth,
Ye knowe your ſelfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyſhe and frogges both.
Caſt in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyſt aſſyne:
For it is your owne fyſhyng and not myne.
And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other ſhe ſhall it amende.
There is no manne ſo farre out of her grace,
But he ſometyme hath comfort and ſolace:
Ne none agayne ſo farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full ſatisfyed with her behauiour.
Fortune is ſtately, ſolemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheſſe geueth, to haue ſeruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny.
Some manne a thouſande pounde, ſome leſſe ſome more.
But for all that ſhe kepeth euer in ſtore,

From euery manne ſome parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and ſerue her ſtyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some manne hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of ſtelth.
To ſome ſhe ſendeth, children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorſhyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet ſhe pyncheth hym with a ſhrewde wyfe.
Then for aſmuch as it is fortunes guyſe,
To graunt to manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her ſelfe lyſt order and deuyſe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counſayle you eche one truſſe vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With ſuche rewarde as fortune hath you ſent.
All thynges in this boke that ye ſhall rede,
Doe as ye lyſt, there ſhall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as ſurely as your crede.
But notwithſtandyng certes in my mynde,
I durſt well ſwere, as true ye ſhall them fynde,
In euery point eche anſwere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of aſtronomye.

The Deſcripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third ſonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and proweſſe farre vnder them bothe, little of ſtature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left ſhoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of viſage, and ſuch as is in ſtates called warlye, in other menne otherwiſe, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had ſo much a doe in her trauaile: that ſhee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vacuute, and that he came into the world with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) alſo not vnrothed, whither menne of hetred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courſe in hys beginnynge, whiche in the courſe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill capraine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his diſpoſicion was more meetely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and ſommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne perſone, either of hardineſſe or polytike order, free was hee called of dyſpence, and ſommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vaſtedfaſte frendeſhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiſſe whome he thoughte to kyll: diſpitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the ſuretie and encreaſe of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whoſe life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knowledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Semme wiſe menne alſo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whoſe life hee looked that euil dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whoſe life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo entendynge, whither the ſame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterpriſed to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel ſhote too farre as to ſhort. Howbeit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the ſelfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myſtlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haſte to the houſe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecroſſe ſtrete without Crepulgate: and when he was with haſtye rappyng quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayſter the duke of Glouceſter bee kynge. What cauſe hee hadde ſoo to thynke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee ſuche thynge purpoſed, or otherwyſe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likelye to ſpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hyſtorye, were it that the duke of Glouceſter hadde of old fore-minded this concluſion, or was nowe at erſte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruccion, with the vſurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymſelfe. And for as muche as hee well wiſte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the queenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuiſion ſhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firſte vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deſtruccion of the tother: and then wynne to this purpoſe as manye as he coulde: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he ſhold ſoone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion betwene hys frendes ſommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good healthe he ſommewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle betwene them, hymſelfe ſhould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when hee receiued his naturall ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children ſhoulde lacke diſcrecion of themſelf, and good counſayle of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhold counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduyſe too wynne themſelfe fauour, then by profitable aduertiſemente to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpecyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpecially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſe cretelye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyſe) as for diuerſe other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties were comme in preſence, the kynge liftinge vppe himſelfe and vnderſette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leaue you, ſuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themſelfe at warre ere their diſcrecion woulde ſerue to ſette you at peace. Ye ſee their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely ſuretie to reſte in youre concord. For it ſuffiſeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulneſſe happelye woulde ſuffiſe. But childehood muſt be maintained by mens authoritye, and ſlipper youth vnderpropped with elder counſayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of eche of others parſon, impugneth eche others counſayle, there muſt it nedes bee long ere anye good concluſion goe forwarde. And alſo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery ſhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyſe, of whyche muſte needes enſue the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whoſe mynd in tender youth infect, ſhal redily fal to miſchief and riot, and drawe down with this noble relme to ruine: but if grace turn him to wiſdom, which if God ſend, then thei that by euill menes before pleaſed him beſt, ſhal after fall fartheſt out of fauour, ſo that euer at length euil driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes proſper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great cauſes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our miſconſtruccion turneth vnto worſe or a final diſpleaſure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had ſo great cauſe of hatred, as ye have of loue. That we be al men, that we be chriſten men, this ſhall I leave for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any prechers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by goyng to the place that thei all preache of.) But this ſhal I deſire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kinred or affinitie, which ſpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the ſacramentes of Chriſtes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that would Godde thei did, ſhoulde no leſſe moue vs to charitye, then the reſpecte of fleſhlye conſanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worſe, for the ſelfe cauſe that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee ſo deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moſte oughte to agree together. Such a peſtilente ſerpente is ambicion and deſyre of vaine glorye and ſoueraintye, whiche amonge ſtates where he once entreth crepeth foorth ſo farre, tyll with deuiſion and variaunce hee turneth all to miſchiefe. Firſte longing to be nexte the beſt, afterwarde egall with the beſte, and at laſte chiefe and aboue the beſte. Of which immoderate appetite of woorſhip, and thereby of debate and diſſencion what loſſe, what ſorowe,

ſorowe, what trouble hathe within theſe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as wel forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as wel haue foreſene, as I haue with my more payne then pleaſure proued, by Goddes bleſſed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courteſye of mennes knees, with the loſſe of ſoo many heades. But ſithen thynges paſſed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occaſion we haue taken ſoo greate hurte afore, that we efteſoones fall not in that occaſion agayne. Nowe be thoſe griefes paſſed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to proſper in wealthfull peace vnder youre coſeyns my children, if Godde ſende them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the leſſe loſſe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleaſure, yet ſhoulde the realme alway finde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among your ſelfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man ſhall periſh and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in theſe laſt wordes that euer I looke to ſpeak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer borne to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all gricues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truſte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne ſurety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to ſitte vp, laide him down on his right ſide, his face towarde them: and none was there preſent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anſwering for the time as thei thought to ſtand with his pleaſure, there in his preſence (as by their wordes appered) eche forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a ſonder. As ſone as the king was departed, the noble prince his ſonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceaſe, kept his houſhold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourſe to iuſtice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this enchealon the prince was in the life of his father ſente thither, to the ende that the authoritie of his preſence ſhould refraine euill diſpoſed parſons fro the boldnes of their former outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his ſending thyther, was there appointed Sir Anthony Woduile lord Riuers and brother vnto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counſayle. Adioyned was there vnto him other of the ſame partie, and in effect euery one as he was nereſt of kin vnto the quene, ſo was planted next about the prince. That diſte by the quene not vnwiſely deuiſed, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauour, the duke of Glouceſter turned vnto their deſtruccion, and vpon that grounde ſet the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom ſoeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himſelf their fauor, hee brake vnto them, ſome by mouth, ſom by writing or ſecret meſſengers, that it neyther was reaſon nor in any wiſe to be ſuffered, that the yong king their maſter and kinſmanne, ſhoold bee in the handes and cuſtodye of his mothers kinred, ſequeſtred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful ſeruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers ſide: whoſe blood (quod he) ſauing the kinges pleaſure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who ſay remoued from the kyng, and the leſſe noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys mageſtie, nor vnto vs, and alſo to his grace no ſurety to haue the mightieſt of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to ſuffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and ſone perſwaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himſelf, albeit he was a manne of age and of diſcrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then ſtode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them ſelfe. Whiche whither they ſorer thirſted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to geſſe. And if ſome folkes frendſhip had not holden better place with the king, then any reſpect of kinred, thei might peraduenture eaſily haue be trapped and brought to confuſion ſomme of vs ere this. Why not as eaſily as they haue done ſome other aheadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paſte. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee ſuffer this yong kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuſe the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouiſion forbyd. Of which good prouiſion none of vs hath any thing the leſſe nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleaſure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is ſo vnwyſe, ouerſone to truſte a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, ſodainely contract in one houre continued, yet ſcant a fortnight, ſhold be be depen ſetled in their ſtomackes: then a long accuſtomed malice many yeres rooted.

With theſe wordes and writynges and ſuche other, the duke of Glouceſter ſone ſet a fyre, them that were of themſelf ethe to kindle, and in eſpeciall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Haſtinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe ſucceſſion from his anceſtres, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. Theſe two not bearing eche to other ſo muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Glouceſter, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kinges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Glouceſter vnderſtandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with ſuche power of theyr frendes, that it ſhoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpoſe to paſſe, without the gathering and great aſſemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiſte was doubtous, and in which the kyng being on their ſide, his part ſhould haue the face and name of a rebellion: he ſecretly therefore by diuers meanes, cauſed the quene to be perſwaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alſo ſhold be ieopardous, the king to come vp ſtrong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing ſtudyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred ſhold aſſemble in the kinges name muche people, thei ſhould geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene ſommetyme debate, to feare and ſuſpecte, leſte they ſhoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges ſauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for theyr deſtruccion, hauying more regarde to their old variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cauſe thei ſhoulde aſſemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whoſe power ſhe wyſte wel farre ſtretched. And thus ſhould all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof ſhould enſue, which was likely not to be litle, and the moſt harme there like to fal wher ſhe left would, al the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and ſay that thei had vnwyſelye and vntrewlye alſo, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her huſband ſo prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obſerued.

The quene being in this wiſe perſwaded, ſuche woorde ſent vnto her ſonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Glouceſter hymſelfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wr vnto the kynge ſoo reuerentlye, and to the queenes frendes there ſoo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye myſtruſtynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haſte, not in good ſpede, with a ſober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when theſe dukes of Glouceſter and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Riuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene theſe dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courteſye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes ſecretelye with a fewe of their moſte priuye frendes, ſette them downe in counſayle, wherin they ſpent a great parte of the nyght. And at their riſinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei ſent about priuily to their ſeruantes in the innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them ſelfe ſhortely readye, for their lordes wer to horſebackward. Vppon whiche meſſages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers ſeruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde theſe dukes taken alſo into their cuſtodye the kayes of the inne, that none ſhoulde paſſe foorth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye toward Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde beeſtowed certayne of theyr folke, that ſhoulde ſende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they ſhould geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themſelfe entended for the ſhewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrſte that ſhoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highneſſe oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderſtode the gates cloſed, and the wayes on euerye ſide beſette, neyther hys ſeruauntes nor hymſelf ſuffered to go oute, parceiuyng well ſo greate a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner preſent with this laſt nightes chere, in ſo few houres ſo gret a chaunge maruelouſlye miſliked. How be it ſithe hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe himſelfe cloſe, hee woulde not, leſte he ſhoulde ſeeme to hyde himſelfe for ſome ſecret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he ſaw no ſuch cauſe in hym ſelf: he determined vppon the ſuretie of his own conſcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what this matter myghte meane. Whome as ſoone as they ſawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and ſaye, that hee intended to ſette diſtaunce beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confuſion, but it ſhoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee be-ganne (as hee was a very well ſpoken manne) in goodly wiſe to excuſe himſelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunſwere, but ſhortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horſebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horſebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becauſe it was to ſtreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as ſone as they came in his preſence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham ſaide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wiſe, ſalued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miſtruſtinge as yet. But euen by and by in his preſence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richarde Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, ſayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpaſſed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to ſette variaunce among the ſtates, and to ſubdewe and deſtroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumpliſhinge whereof, they ſayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treaſor, and ſent menne to the ſea. All whiche thinge theſe dukes wiſte well were done for good purpoſes and neceſſari by the whole counſaile at London, ſauing that ſommewhat thei muſt ſai. Vnto whiche woordes, the king aunſwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot ſaie. But in good faith I dare well aunſwere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, that thei be innocent of any ſuch matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in theſe matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arreſted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges preſence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counſaile. And there they ſent awaie from the kinge whom it pleaſed them, and ſette newe ſeruantes aboute him, ſuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Glouceſter ſente a diſhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all ſhould be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the meſſenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richarde with the ſame meſſage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom ſuch aduerſitie was ſtraunge. But himſelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courteſye of the duke of Glouceſter he ſent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to priſon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in concluſion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maiſtres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was priſoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more deſyer then I haue. I beſeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And ſuch thynges as I ſomewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truſte he dothe and better to by hys holy ſpirite: who bleſſe you and preſerue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all nor your babes, nor your nurſes, nor your good huſbandes, nor your good huſbandes ſhrewde wyues, nor your fathers ſhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two ſhort ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys paſtyme while he was priſoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the loſt louer.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer ſo fayre,
Or neuer ſo pleſantly begin to ſmile,
As though thou wouldſt my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou ſhalt not me begile.
Truſt ſhall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen ſure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a ſtorme.

DAUY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Luke your ſeruing man,
And now haue loſt agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beſhrew your cat,
But in fayth I bleſſe you agayne a thouſand times,
For lending me now ſome layſure to make rymes.

At the ſame time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whoſe works it ſeems proper to inſert a few ſtanzas, though he cannot be ſaid to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the ſonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete entryped hath our corne
When Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, ſmylynge halfe in ſcorne
At our foly and our vnſtedfaſtneſſe
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres,
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke ſubtylly
With freſhe vtteraunce full ſentencyouſly
Dyuerſe in ſtyle ſome ſpared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
May neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was ſore moued to a forſe the ſame
But ignoraunce full ſoone dyd me dyſcure
And ſhewed that in this arte I was not ſure
For to illumine ſhe ſayd I was to dulle
Aduyſynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he ſo wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen ſuche er this
But of reproche ſurely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he ſlyde downe, who ſhall him ſaue?
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and caſt
That I ne wyſte what to do was beſte
So ſore enwered that I was at the laſte
Enforſed to ſlepe, and for to take ſome reſte
And to lye downe as ſoone as I my dreſte
At Harwyche porte ſlumbrynge as I laye
In myne hoſtes houſe called powers keye.

Of the wits that flouriſhed in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this hiſtory would therefore have been imperfect without ſome ſpecimens of his works, which yet it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh from thoſe of Sir Thomas Wyat and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three firſt are, I believe, Surry's; the reſt, being of the ſame age, are ſelected, ſome as examples of different meaſures, and one as the oldeſt compoſition which I have found in blank verſe.

Deſcription of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, ſave only the lover.

THE ſoote ſeaſon that bud, and bloome fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new ſhe ſinges;
The turtle to her mate hath told the tale:
Somer is come, for every ſpray now ſpringes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter cõate he flynges;
The fiſhes flete with newe repayred ſcale:
The adder all her ſlough away ſhe flynges,
The ſwift ſwallow purſueth the flyes ſmalle,
The buſy bee her honey how ſhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I ſee among theſe pleaſant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my ſorrow ſprynges.

Deſcripcion of the reſtleſs eſtate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides ſcourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courſe begunne:
And then I ſaw howe my deſyre
Miſguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me loſe a better prey.
For when in ſighes I ſpent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling ſmoke dyd ſtill bewray,
The preſent heat of ſecret flame:
And when ſalt teares do bayne my breaſt,
Where love his pleaſent traynes hath ſown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes oppreſt,
Ere that the buddes were ſpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ſtill purſue,
The flying chaſe of theyre requeſt;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breſte.
When every loke theſe cheekes might ſtayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward ſignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my harte was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elſe ſhould ſee
My ſpeckled chekes with Cupids hew.
And now the covert breſt I clame,
That worſhipt Cupide ſecretely;
And nouriſhed hys ſacred flame,
From whence no blairing ſparks do flye.

Deſcripcion

Deſcripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moſt part in diſcord
Our willes do ſtand, whereby our hartes but ſeldom do accord:
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The ſimple hartes which he doth ſtrike with froward divers ſtroke.
He cauſeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
Whoſe gleames of burning fyre and eaſy ſparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From caſye ford where I myghte wade and paſs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:
And me withholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beſeke of Grace;
He lettes me to purſue a conqueſt welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were loſt, ere that my ſute begunne.
So by this means I know how ſoon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ſtryfe, and ſo agayne returne.
I know how to content my ſelf in others luſt,
Of little ſtuffe unto my ſelf to weave a webbe of truſt:
And how to hyde my harmes with ſole dyſſembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forſakes the face for dred,
And how by ſhame it ſtaynes agayne the Chekes with flaming red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reſtleſs forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he ſhakes,
In ſynging how he doth complayne, in ſleeping how he wakes
To languiſh without ache, ſickeleſſe for to conſume,
A thouſand thynges for to devyſe, reſolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyſte to ſee his Ladyes Grace full ſore
Such pleaſures as delyght hys Eye, do not his helthe reſtore.
I know to ſeke the tracte of my deſyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do ſeek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muſt transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with ſprite from Lyfe removed.
I knowe in harty ſighes and laughters of the ſpleene,
At once to chaunge my ſtate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to deceyve my ſelf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaſtiſed is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ſtandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freaſe;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waſte, and ſo my Lyfe I leeſe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How ſmalle a nete may take and maſe a harte of gentle kynde:
Or elſe with ſeldom ſwete to ſeaſon hepes of gall,
Revived with a glympſe of Grace old ſorrowes to let fall.
The hydden traynes I know, and ſecret ſnares of Love,
How ſoone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The ſlypper ſtate I know, the ſodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and ſure deſpaired helthe.

A praiſe of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boaſt not your ſelves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whoſe face will ſtayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ſtone,
I wiſhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriſtall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart ſuffiſe
To ſee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loſt the moulde,
Where ſhe her ſhape did take;
Or elſe I doubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whoſe like was never ſeene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe ſhe is Diana chaſt
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ſtedfaſt;
What will you more we ſay:

If all the world were fought ſo farre,
Who could finde ſuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ſtarre
Within the froſty night.

The Lover refuſed of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are paſt,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not laſt,
My grave and I am one.
My mvrth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Deſirous to be ded,
My miſchiefe to forego.
I burne and am a colde,
I freeſe amyddes the fyer,
I ſee ſhe doth witholde
That is my honeſt deſyre.
I ſee my helpe at hande,
I ſee my lyfe alſo,
I ſee where ſhe doth ſtande
That is my deadly fo.
I ſee how ſhe doth ſee,
And yet ſhe wil be blynde,
I ſee in helpyng me,
She ſekes and wil not fynde.
I ſee how ſhe doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I ſee when I come nye,
How fayne ſhe would be gone.
I ſee what wil ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you ſhall ſee therfore
That ſhe ſhall have her will.
I cannot live with ſtones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aſtronomer, in the firſt fight that Alexander had with the Perſians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan paſſe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang,
Shrowded with ſhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre. Againſt full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whoſe greedy guts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againſt the Perſians fare,
Now corpſes hyde the purpurde ſoyle with blood;
Large ſlaughter on eche ſide, but Perſes more,
Moyſt [illegible]es bebled, theyr heartes and numbers abate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The lireing Macedon by ſwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his mereſt kyn,
Oxate preſerves with horſemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge ſhould give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where ſtrong youth is ſpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perſes ſoweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym ſmytes the club, hym woundes farre ſtryking bowe,
And him the ſling, and him the ſhining ſword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reſtes.
Right over ſtoode in ſnowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celeſtiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aſpect, eclips,
And influence, and conſtellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty ſtorde, what ſigne forewarned death,
How winter gendreth ſnow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth ſeaſon well the ſoyle,
Why ſummer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themſelves how great
Proportion is; what ſway the erryng lightes
Doth ſend in courſe gayne that fyrſt movyng heaven;
What grees one from another diſtance be,
What ſtarr doth let the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what oppoſition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorſes fyre,
What houſe eche one doth ſeeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven ſphere, nor that ſmall thynges
I ſpeake, whole heaven he cloſeth in his breſt.
This ſage then in the ſtarres hath ſpyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, ſith,
He ſaw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he preſt in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand deſirous to be ſlain,
The bouldeſt borne, and worthieſt in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And ſeking death, in fyrſt front of his rage,
Comes deſperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckleſſe wordes and clamour him provokes,
And ſayth, Nectanaks baſtard ſhamefull ſtayne
Of mothers bed, why loſeſt thou thy ſtrokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in caſe
Manhood there be ſo much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare

Apollo's

Apollo's laurell both for learnings laude,
And eke for martiall praiſe, that in my ſhielde
The ſeven fold Sophi of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with ſoft words ayen,
O monſtrous man (quoth he) what ſo thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muſes manſion marre;
That treaſure houſe this hand ſhall never ſpoyle,
My ſword ſhall never bruiſe that ſkillful brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of ſcience ſone to ſpill;
O howe fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wiſdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiſer and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perſwades to be downe, ſent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flouriſh, nor no knowledge vailes
For all theſe ſawes. When thus the ſovereign ſaid,
Alighted Zoroas with ſword unſheathed,
The careleſs king there ſmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quiſhes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnaſhe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wiſe
Hym to forbeare, ſett ſpurrs unto his ſtede,
And turnde away, leſt anger of his ſmarte
Should cauſe revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this ſight,
But ran upon the ſaid Egyptian rude,
And cut him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of ſouldiours ſterne,
And all in pieces hewed the ſely ſeg,
But happely the ſoule fled to the ſtarres,
Where, under him, he hath full ſight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Perſians wauld ſuch ſapience to forgoe,
The very ſone the Macedonians wiſht
He would have lived, king Alexander ſelfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who wonne like praiſe for conqueſt of his Yre,
As for ſtoute men in field that day ſubdued,
Who princes taught how to diſcerne a man,
That in his head ſo rare a jewel beares,
But over all thoſe lame Camenes, thoſe ſame,
Divine Camenes, whoſe honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cheriſh hym deceaſt, and ſett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fooles, of which the following extract will ſhew his ſtyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falſe Accuſers.

O Heartleſs fooles, haſte here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here ſhall I ſhewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde ſhall great proſperitie,
Enſuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, ſhall finde auauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles that in your ſinne are bolde,
Enſue ye wiſdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wiſdome is the way of men moſt excellent:
Therfore haue done, and ſhortly ſpede your pace,
To quaynt your ſelf and company with grace.
Learne what is vertue, therin is great ſolace,
Learne what is truth, ſadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchaſe,
Forſake your folly and inconuenience,
Ceaſe to be fooles, and ay to ſue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wiſedome is ground of clenlynes.
Wiſedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man enduеth with honour ſpeciall,
But ſuche heartes as ſlepe in fooliſhnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
But in this little barge in principall
All fooliſh mockers I purpoſe to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itch or greue.
Mockers and ſcorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough comb here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which cauſeth great debate:
Suche caytiues ſpare neyther poore man nor eſtate,
And where their ſelfe are moſt worthy deriſion,
Other men to ſcorne is all their moſt condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abuſion,
Whiche of wiſe men deſpiſeth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, ſcorne, and colluſion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good diſcipline:
Shewe to ſuche wiſdome, yet ſhall they not encline
Unto the ſame, but ſet nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, ſtill or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe ſhall he haue by and by:
Thus in deriſion haue fooles their ſpeciall game.
Correct a wiſe man that woulde eſchue ill name,
And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly ſhall intende.

If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting mekely unto subiection,
Folowing his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own shame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so is he sore wounded with the same,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
Shall of all other be mocked at the last.
He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his scornes cast,
Agaynst a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vseth the same.
But who that of sinne is cleane in deede and thought,
May him well scorne whose liuing is starke nought.
The scornes of Naball full dere should haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes sought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.
So might they curse the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this sort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wise men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall
Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in scorne set your ioy,
Proudly despising Gods punition:
Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him seruaunt to all his lyne and stocke.
So shall ye caytifs at the conclusion,
Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

Thus have I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress may be easily traced, and the gradations observed, by which it advanced from its first rudeness to its present elegance.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of suche woordes and mater as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue prayse for tellynge his tale in open assemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundynge lute muche setteth forthe a meane deuised ballade. Or as the founde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, so a cleare soundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therfore, that famouse oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefest point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made aunswere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunswere, till they lefte askyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can doue nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can doue right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Æschines lykwyse beyng banniſhed his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes aunswere thereunto, by force whereof he was banniſhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same: then (q d Æschines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymselfe speak it. Thus beyng cast in miserie and banniſhed for euer, he could not but geue such greate reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

GRAMMAR

ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of uſing words properly, compriſes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Proſody.

In this diviſion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diſtribution might not be found. Experience has long ſhown this method to be ſo diſtinct as to obviate confuſion, and ſo comprehenſive as to prevent any inconvenient omiſſions. I likewiſe uſe the terms already received, and already underſtood, though perhaps others more proper might ſometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whoſe new terms have ſunk their learning into neglect, have left ſufficient warning againſt the trifling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into ſyllables, and ſyllables into words. It therefore teaches previouſly the form and ſound of letters.

The letters of the Engliſh language are,

Saxon.	Roman.	Italick.	Old Engliſh.	Name.

Z z	Z z	Z z	ℨ 𝔷	zed, more commonly izzard or uzzard, that is ſ hard.

To theſe may be added certain combinations of letters univerſally uſed in printing; as ct, ſt, fi, fl, ſh, ck, ff, ffi, ffl, &, or and per ſe, and. ct, ſt, fi, fl, ff, ffi, ffl, ſh, ck.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, becauſe anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expreſſed by the ſame character; but as thoſe letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly ſaid to conſiſt of twenty-ſix letters.

None of the ſmall conſonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is uſed in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words ſays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as ſyſtem, σύστημα; ſympathy, συμπαθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, lowneſs.

The ſounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I ſhall not, like ſome other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form, as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of ſpeech, as a mechanick, anatomiſt, or phyſiologiſt; nor into the properties and gradation of ſounds, or the elegance or harſhneſs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerſal and tranſcendental grammar. I conſider the Engliſh alphabet only as it is Engliſh; and even in this narrow diſquiſition, I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becauſe by writing in Engliſh I ſuppoſe my reader already acquainted with the Engliſh language, and conſequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and becauſe of ſounds in general it may be obſerved, that words are unable to deſcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and ſimple letters is uſeleſs almoſt alike to thoſe who know their ſound, and thoſe who know it not.

Of VOWELS.

A.

A has three ſounds, the ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender is found in moſt words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, ſalvation, generation.

The a ſlender is the proper Engliſh a, called very juſtly by Erpenius, in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e miſtum, as having a middle ſound between the open a and the e. The French have a ſimilar ſound in the word pais, and in their e maſculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly reſembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glaſs.

A broad reſembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we ſtill ſay fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon ſound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruſtick pronunciation; as maun for man, baund for band.

The ſhort a approaches to the a open, as graſs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always ſlender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w. Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the ſound of the long and ſlender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Æ is ſometimes found in Latin words not completely naturaliſed or aſſimilated, but is no Engliſh diphthong; and is more properly expreſſed by ſingle e, as Ceſar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs moſt frequently in the Engliſh language.

E is long, as in ſcēne; or ſhort, as in cĕllar, ſĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

e It is always ſhort before a double conſonant, or two conſonants, as in vĕx, pĕrplexity, rĕſent, mĕdlar, rĕptile, ſerpent, cellar, aſſation, bleſſing, ſĕll, ſelling, dĕbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being uſed to modify the foregoing conſonant, as ſince, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bān, bīne; cas, cāne; pīn, pīne; tūn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; fir, fire; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almoſt all words which now terminate in conſonants ended anciently in e, as yeare, yeare; wildneſſe, woldneſſe; which e probably had the power of the French e feminine, and conſtituted a ſyllable with its aſſociate conſonant; for, in old editions, words are ſometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or ſilent in poetry, as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Remains calls it the nient e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glŏve, lŏve, gĭve.

It has ſometimes in the end of words a ſound obſcure, and ſcarcely perceptible, as open, ſhaſen, ſhotten, thiſtle, participle, lucre.

This faintneſs of ſound is found when e ſeparates a mute from a liquid, as in rŏtten; or follows a mute and liquid, as in cattle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, ſtew.

Ea ſounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is ſounded like e long, as ſeize, perceiving.

Eu ſounds as u long and ſoft.

E, a, u, are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the ſound of u.

E may be ſaid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, ſleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is ſounded as e ſhort; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a ſound, long, as fīne; and ſhort, as fĭn.

That is eminently obſervable in i, which may be likewiſe remarked in other letters, that the ſhort ſound is not the long ſound contracted, but a ſound wholly different.

The long ſound in monoſyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often ſounded before r as a ſhort u; as flirt, firſt, ſhirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, ſhield, which is ſounded as the double ee; except friend, which is ſounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are ſounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or ſhort, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏck.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The ſhort o has ſometimes the ſound of a cloſe u, as ſon, come.

O coaleſces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the ſound of o long.

O is united to e in ſome words derived from Greek, as æconomy; but oe being not an Engliſh diphthong, they are better written as they are ſounded, with only e, ecunomy.

With i, as oil, ſoil, moil, noiſome.

This coalition of letters ſeems to unite the ſounds of the two letters as far as two ſounds can be united without being deſtroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the ſound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long, as in ſoul, bowl, ſow, grow. Theſe different ſounds are uſed to diſtinguiſh different ſignifications; as bow, an inſtrument for ſhooting; bow, a depreſſion of the head: ſow, the ſhe of a boar; ſow, to ſcatter ſeed: howl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden veſſel.

Ou is ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as court; ſometimes like o ſhort, as cough; ſometimes like u cloſe, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which uſe only can teach.

Ou is frequently uſed in the laſt ſyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are in the Engliſh, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have expelled the u, without conſidering that the laſt ſyllable gives the ſound neither of or nor ur, but a ſound between them, a true compounded of both, beſides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honneur, faveur.

U.

U is long in uſe, conſūſion; or ſhort, as ŭs, concŭſſion.

It coaleſces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in theſe combinations the force of the w, as quaff, queſt, quit, quote, la guaſpe, ſometimes in ui the i loſes its ſound, as in juice. It is ſometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, gueſt, guiſe, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no ſound.

Ue is ſometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as prorogue, ſynagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obſerves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It ſupplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as deſtroy, deſtroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; jay, jayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ẏ, which was commonly uſed where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle ſyllable, before two conſonants, is commonly ſhort, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monoſyllables a ſingle vowel before a ſingle conſonant is ſhort, as flŭg, frŏg.

Many is pronounced as if it were wrote manny.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried ſound, ſuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is uſed before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the ſound of ſ; as ſincerely, centrick, century, circular, ciſtern, city, ſiccity: before a, o, and u, it ſounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curioſity, concupiſcence.

C might be omitted in the language without loſs, ſince one of its ſounds might be ſupplied by ſ, and the other by k, but that it preſerves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a ſound which is analyſed into tſh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the ſame ſound which the Italians give to the c ſimple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is ſounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymiſt, ſcheme, choler. Arch is commonly ſounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Engliſh ſound of ch before a conſonant, as archbiſhop.

Ch, in ſome French words not yet aſſimilated, ſounds like ſh, as machine, chaiſe.

C, having no determinate ſound, according to Engliſh orthography, never ends a word, therefore we write ſtick, block, which were originally ſticke, blocke, in ſuch words. C is now mute.

It is uſed before l and r, as clock, croſs.

Is uniform in its ſound, as death, diligent.

It is uſed before r, as drave, dregs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, is numbered by the grammarians among the ſemi-vowels; yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiouſly ſounded before a liquid, as fraſl, ſhy, freckle. It has an unvariable ſound, except that of is ſometimes ſpoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two ſounds, one hard, as in gain, go, gun; the other ſoft, as in gem, grant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, ſnug, ſong, frog.

Before e and i the ſound is uncertain.

G before e is ſoft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeſe, get, together, and derivatives from words ending in g, as ſinging, ſtinger, and generally before er at the end of words, as ſinger.

G is mute before n, as gnaſh, ſign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantic, gibbet, gibe, giblets, Gilis, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, girgle, to which may be added Egypt and goſſey.

Gh, in the beginning of a word, has the ſound of the hard g, as ghoſtly; in the middle, and ſometimes at the end, it is quite ſilent, as though, right, ſought, ſpoken tho', rite, ſoute.

It has often at the end the ſound of f, as laugh, whence laughter retains the ſame ſound in the middle; cough, trough, ſough, tough, enough, ſlough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a conſonant, deeply guttural, which is ſtill continued among the Scotch.

G is uſed before h, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aſpiration, and ſhows that the following vowel muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of breath, as hat, herſe.

It ſeldom begins any but the firſt ſyllable, in which it is always ſounded with a full breath, except in Leu, herb, hoſtler, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

It ſometimes begins middle or final ſyllables in words compounded, as block-head, or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

I.

J conſonant ſounds uniformly like the ſoft g, and is therefore a letter uſeleſs, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jeſter, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the ſound of hard c, and is uſed before e and i, where, according to Engliſh analogy, c would be ſoft, as kept, king, ſkirt, ſkeptick, for ſo it ſhould be written, not ſceptick, becauſe ſc is ſounded like ſ, as in ſcene.

It is uſed before n, as knell, knot, but totally loſes its ſound in modern pronunciation.

K is never doubled; but c is uſed before it to ſhorten the vowel by a double conſonant, as căckle, pickle.

L.

L has in Engliſh the ſame liquid ſound as in other languages.

The cuſtom is to double the l at the end of monoſyllables, as kill, will, full. Theſe words were originally written kille, wille, fulle, and when the e firſt grew ſilent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is ſometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, ſhould, pſalm, talk, ſalmon, falcon.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural ſounds, ſometimes aſpirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a loaf, or bread, hlaford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now diſuſed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almoſt mute, as table, ſhuttle.

M.

M has always the ſame ſound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the ſame ſound, as noble, manners.

N is ſometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the ſame ſound, which the Welſh and Germans confound with B.

P is ſometimes mute, as in pſalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is uſed for f in words derived from the Greek, as philoſopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a ſound which our Saxon anceſtors well expreſſed by cp, cw, as quadrant, queen, equeſtrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is ſometimes ſounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R.

R has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other tongues.

The Saxons uſed often to put h before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is uſed in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of ſome words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, ſepulchre.

S.

S has a hiſſing ſound, as ſibilation, ſiſter.

A ſingle s ſeldom ends any word, except in the third perſon of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, buſhes, diſtreſſes; the pronouns this,

this, his, hers, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, surplus; the cluſe being always either in ſe, as houſe, horſe, or in ſs, as graſs, graſs, liſs, laſs, anciently graſſe, draſſe.

S ſingle, at the end of words, has a groſſer ſound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, ſurplus.

It ſounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intruſion; and like f, if it follows a conſonant, as converſion.

It ſounds like z before e mute, as refuſe, and before y final, as roſy; and in thoſe words boſom, deſire, wiſdom, priſon, priſoner, preſent, preſent, damſel, caſement.

It is the peculiar quality of ſ, that it may be ſounded before all conſonants, except z and x, in which ſ is compriſed, x being only ks, and z a hard or groſs ſ. This ſ is therefore termed by grammarians ſuæ poteſtatis litera; the reaſon of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be, that in ſome words it might be doubled at pleaſure. Thus we find in ſeveral languages:

Σκιμπιάι, ſcatter, ſdegno, ſdrucciolo, ſſavellare, σφίγξ, ſgombrare, ſgranare, ſhake, ſlumber, ſmell, ſnipe, ſpace, ſplendour, ſpring, ſqueeze, ſtrew, ſtep, ſtrength, ſtramen, ſtripe, ſventura, ſwell.

S is mute in iſle, iſland, demeſne, viſcount.

T.

T has its cuſtomary ſound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the ſound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as queſtion; excepting likewiſe derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two ſounds; the one ſoft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The ſound is ſoft in theſe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, theſe, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, thoſe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e ſilent muſt be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a ſound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f, in the Iſlandick alphabet, v is only diſtinguiſhed by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, ſome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a conſonant; and not rather, as it is called, a double u or ou, as water may be reſolved into ouater; but letters of the ſame ſound are always reckoned conſonants in other alphabets: and it may be obſerved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as froſty winter.

Wh has a ſound accounted peculiar to the Engliſh, which the Saxons better expreſſed by hp, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and ſometimes in wholeſome, wh is ſounded like a ſimple h.

X.

X begins no Engliſh word; it has the ſound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either a vowel or diphthong, is a conſonant, ye, young. It is thought by ſome to be in all caſes a vowel. But it may be obſerved of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as roſy youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the ſounds which they are ſuppoſed to have as conſonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like [illegible] of all other conſonants: thus we ſay, tu, ut; do, odd; but in wed, dwe[illegible] ſounds of w have no reſemblance to each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally Engliſh; it has the ſound, as its name izzard, or ſ hard expreſſes, of an ſ uttered with cloſer compreſſion of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have ſuppoſed orthoepy, or juſt utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expreſſing certain ſounds by proper characters. I have therefore obſerved in what words any of the letters are mute.

Moſt of the writers of Engliſh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwiſe than they are written, and ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered, that of Engliſh, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curſory and colloquial, the other regular and ſolemn. The curſory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unſkilfulneſs, or affectation. The ſolemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always leſs remote from the orthography, and leſs liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curſory ſpeech of thoſe with whom they happened to converſe; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often eſtabliſhed the jargon of the loweſt of the people as the model of ſpeech.

For pronunciation the beſt general rule is, to conſider thoſe of the moſt elegant ſpeakers who deviate leaſt from the written words.

There have been many ſchemes offered for the emendation and ſettlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earlieſt writers in rude ages, was at firſt very various and uncertain, and is yet ſufficiently irregular. Of theſe reformers ſome have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without conſidering that this is to meaſure by a ſhadow, to take that for a model or ſtandard which is changing while they apply it. Others, leſs abſurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of ſucceſs, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of ſounds, that every ſound may have its own character, and every character a ſingle ſound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a ſynod of grammarians upon principles of ſcience. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books uſeleſs? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confuſion and perplexity of ſuch an alteration?

Some of theſe ſchemes I ſhall however exhibit, which may be uſed according to the diverſities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the firſt who propoſed a ſcheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, ſecretary of ſtate to Queen Eliſabeth, a man of real learning, and much practiſed in grammatical diſquiſitions. Had he written the following lines according to his ſcheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Eraſmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the prieſthood, and the ſhame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thoſe holy Vandals off the ſtage.

At lengθ Eraſmus, θat grêt ïngu'd nâm,
Æe glori of θe prëſthüd, and θe zâm,
Stemmd θe wild torrent of a barb'rous âg,
And dröv θoſe höli Vandals off θe ſtâg.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated maſter of St. Paul's ſchool in London; which I cannot repreſent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in uſe, ſo as to make it underſtood, exhibiting two ſtanzas of Spenſer in the reformed orthography.

Spenſer, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, ſaid he, is this the meed,
With which her ſover'ign mercy thou doſt quite?
Thy life ſhe ſaved by her gracious deed;
But thou doſt ween with villanous deſpight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than ſo diſloyally
Deem of her high deſert, or ſeem ſo light.
Fair death it is to ſhun more ſhame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love diſloyally.
But if to love diſloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be ſuch reproach from me.
What can I leſs do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot reſtore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her ſerve,
Dying her ſerve, and living her adore.
Thy life ſhe gave, thy life ſhe doth deſerve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her ſervice ſwerve.

Vnθankful wrεθ, ſaid hj, iz θis θe mjd,
Wiþ wiθ her ſoþerain merſi θou duſt quit?
Dj ljf ſj ſafd bj her graſius djd;
But θou duſt wεn wiþ hëlanus diſpjt.

Tu blot her honor, and her hešnlj lišt.
Dj, raðer dj, ðen so disloialtj
Djm of her hlb duart, or sjm so lišt.
Fair deþ it is tu þun mer þām; ðan dj
Dj, raðer dj, ðan sper luþ disloialtj.
But if tu luþ disloialtj it bj,
Sal I ðen hāt her ðat from dešez dor
Mj broudt? ah! far bj sus reproz from mj.
Wat kan I les du ðen her luþ ðerfor,
Bib I her du reward kanot refter?
Dj, raðer dj, and djiz du har sarts,
Djiz har sarts, and lib z har adər.
Dj ljt þj gāw, ðj ljf þj dub dazarts;
Dj, raðer dj, ðan sper from har sarþis swerd.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an underſtanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He ſeems to have been more ſanguine than his predeceſſors, for he printed his book according to his own ſcheme, which the following ſpecimen will make eaſily underſtood.

But whenſoever you have occaſion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to ſtand upon your guard, than to truſt to their gentleneſs. For the ſafeguard of your face, which they have moſt mind unto, provide a purſehood, made of coarſe boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more ſafety is to be lined againſt the eminent parts with woollen cloth. Firſt cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other, which being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſame breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks, and then ſet another piece about the breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of the noſe. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may ſerve, though it be in the heat of the day.

Bet penſoever you hav occaſion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to coom among ðem being trubled, it is better to ſtand upon your gard, ðan to truſt to ðeir gentleneſs. For ðe ſaf gard of your fac', pič ðey hav' moſt mind' unto, provid' a purſehood, mad' of coorſe boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, pič for mor ſaf'ty is to bee lined againſt ð' eminent parts wit woollen clot. Firſt cut a piec' about an inč and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reač round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer, pič being ſowed in his plac', join unto it two ſort peeces of the ſam breadt under ðe eys, for the balls of ðe cheeks, and then ſet an oðer piec' about ðe breadt of a ſilling againſt the top o ðe noſe. At oðer times, ßen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may ſerve, ðowg it be in the heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography, as appears, among other books, in ſuch editions of the works of Milton as were publiſhed by himſelf. Of theſe reformers, every man had his own ſcheme, but they agreed in one general deſign of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting ſuch as they thought ſuperfluous. Some of them would have written theſe lines thus.

——————All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Biſhop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philoſophical language, propoſed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography, by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Yur Fádher hwitſh art in héven halloed bi dhyi nám, thyi cingdym cym, dhy will bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have ſince had no general reformers; but ſome ingenious men have endeavoured to deſerve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tenſe, ſais for ſays, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of theſe it may be ſaid, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both becauſe they have innovated little, and becauſe few have followed them.

The Engliſh language has properly no dialects; the ſtyle of writers has no profeſſed diverſity in the uſe of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, nor differs but by different degrees of ſkill or care. The oral diction is uniform in no ſpacious country, but has leſs variation in England than in moſt other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of uſe, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonick race, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now ſeems harſh and rough, but was probably uſed by our anceſtors. The northern ſpeech is therefore not barbarous but obſolete. The ſpeech in the weſtern provinces ſeems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would expreſs.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the ſenſe of the ſame word is diverſified; as horſe, horſes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The Engliſh have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite ſignification, and means one, with ſome reference to more; as This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a ſword, that is, ſome ſword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of theſe that are men than one of thoſe that are boys. An army might enter without reſiſtance, that is, any army.

In the ſenſes in which we uſe a or an in the ſingular, we ſpeak in the plural without an article; as, theſe are good books.

I have made an the original article, becauſe it is only the Saxon an, or on, one, applied to a new uſe, as the German an, and the French un: the n being cut off before a conſonant in the ſpeed of utterance.

Grammarians of the laſt age direct, that an ſhould be uſed before h; whence it appears that the Engliſh anciently aſpirated leſs. An is ſtill uſed before the ſilent h, as, an herb, an honeſt man: but otherwiſe a; as,

A horſe, a horſe, my kingdom for a horſe. Shakeſpeare.

An or a can only be joined with a ſingular, the correſpondent plural is the noun without an article, as I want a pen; I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective ſome, as I want ſome pens.

THE has a particular and definite ſignification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So, He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the uſe of man; that is, for thoſe beings that are cattle, and his uſe that is man.

The is uſed in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature firſt made man,
Ere the baſe laws of ſervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble ſavage ran. Dryden.

Many words are uſed without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Ariſtarchus, Jeruſalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is uſed as a proper name.
2. Abſtract names, as blackneſs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, uglineſs, love, hatred, anger, good-nature, kindneſs.
3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water: this is not braſs, but ſteel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of Engliſh nouns to words going before or following, are not expreſſed by caſes, or changes of termination, but as in moſt of the other European languages by prepoſitions, unleſs we may be ſaid to have a genitive caſe.

		Singular.
Nom.	Magiſter,	a Maſter,	the Maſter.
Gen.	Magiſtri,	of a Maſter,	of the Maſter, or Maſters, the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtro,	to a Maſter,	to the Maſter.
Acc.	Magiſtrum,	a Maſter,	the Maſter.
Voc.	Magiſter,	Maſter,	O Maſter.
Abl.	Magiſtro,	from a Maſter,	from the Maſter.

Plural.

		Plural.
Nom.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Gen.	Magiſtrorum,	of Maſters, of the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtris,	to Maſters, to the Maſters.
Acc.	Magiſtros,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Voc.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, O Maſters.
Abl.	Magiſtris,	from Maſters, from the Maſters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Maſter,	Gen. Maſters.	Plur. Maſters.
Scholar,	Gen. Scholars.	Plur. Scholars.

Theſe genitives are always written with a mark of elision, maſter's, ſcholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the s is a contraction of his, as the ſoldier's valour, for the ſoldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, becauſe 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate; and collective nouns, as Woman's paſſions, the rabble's inſolence, the multitude's folly; in all theſe caſes it is apparent that his cannot be underſtood. We ſay likewiſe, the foundation's ſtrength, the diamond's luſtre, the winter's ſeverity; but in theſe caſes his may be underſtood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now ſupplied by it and its.

The learned and ſagacious Wallis, to whom every Engliſh grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poſſeſſive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the ſame to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ vis, or any other Latin genitive. Dr. Lowth, on the other part, ſuppoſes the poſſeſſive pronouns mine and thine to be genitive caſes.

This termination of the noun ſeems to conſtitute a real genitive indicating poſſeſſion. It is derived to us from thoſe who declined ꝑmiꝺ, a ſmith; Gen. ꝑmiꝺer, of a ſmith; Plur. ꝑmiꝺer, or ꝑmiꝺa, ſmiths; and ſo in two other of their ſeven declenſions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a ſyllable than the original word. Knaves, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenſer.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the ſame with the nominative, as Venus Temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as table, tables: fly, flies; ſiſter, ſiſters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwiſe be ſounded, as after ch, ſ, ſh, x, z; after c ſounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive ſingular is the ſame.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, een, ſhoon, and more anciently eyen and ſhoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, ruff; chief, cliefs. So hoof, roof, proof, relief, miſchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, Landtenchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louſe, mice from mouſe, geeſe from gooſe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have for the moſt part no genitives; but we ſay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againſt the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' houſe may be ſaid for the houſe of Lords, but ſuch phraſes are not now in uſe; and ſurely an Engliſh ear rebels againſt them. They would commonly produce a troubleſome ambiguity, as the Lord's houſe may be the houſe of Lords, or the houſe of a Lord. Beſides that the mark of elision is improper, for in the Lords' houſe nothing is cut off.

Some Engliſh ſubſtantives, like thoſe of many other languages, change their termination as they expreſs different ſexes, as prince, princeſs, actor, actreſs, lion, lioness; hero, heroine. To theſe mentioned by Dr Lowth may be added abbeteſs, poetreſs, chauntreſs, ducheſs, tygreſs, governeſs, tutreſs, peereſs, authreſs, traytreſs, and perhaps others. Of theſe variable terminations we have only a ſufficient number to make us feel our want; for when we ſay of a woman that ſhe is a philoſopher, an aſtronomer, a builder, a weaver, a dancer, we perceive an impropriety in the termination which we cannot avoid; but we can ſay that ſhe is an architect, a botaniſt, a ſtudent, becauſe theſe terminations have not annexed to them the notion of ſex. In words which the neceſſities of life are often requiring, the ſex is diſtinguiſhed not by different terminations, but by different names, as, a bull, a cow; a horſe, a mare; equus, equa; a cock, a hen; and ſometimes by pronouns prefixed, as a he-goat, a ſhe-goat.

Of Adjectives.

Adjectives in the Engliſh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither caſe, gender, nor number, and being added to ſubſtantives in all relations without any change; as a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the ſuperlative by adding eſt, to the poſitive; as fair, fairer, faireſt; lovely, lovelier, lovelieſt; ſweet, ſweeter, ſweeteſt; low, lower, loweſt; high, higher, higheſt.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; near, nearer, next; much, more, moſt; many (or mce), more (for morr), moſt (for moeſt); late, later, lateſt or laſt.

Some comparatives form a ſuperlative by adding moſt, as nether, nethermoſt; outer, outermoſt; under, undermoſt; up, upper, uppermoſt; fore, former, foremoſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

Many adjectives do not admit of compariſon by terminations, and are only compared by more and moſt, as benevolent, more benevolent, moſt benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moſt, even when they have comparatives and ſuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; faireſt, or moſt fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular compariſon, the comparative more is oftener uſed than the ſuperlative moſt, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than moſt fair for faireſt.

The compariſon of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiouſneſs of utterance, or agreeableneſs of ſound, is not eaſily reduced to rules.

Monoſyllables are commonly compared.

Polyſyllables, or words of more than two ſyllables, are ſeldom compared otherwiſe than by more and moſt, as deplorable, more deplorable, moſt deplorable.

Diſſyllables are ſeldom compared if they terminate in ſome, as fulſome, toilſome; in ful, as careful, ſpleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as pompous; in leſs, as careleſs, harmleſs; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ect, as neat; in dy, as cloudy; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as ſkinny; in py, as ruſty, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and ſuperlatives are yet found in good writers, formed without regard to the foregoing rules: but in a language ſubjected ſo little as this to grammar, ſuch anomalies muſt frequently occur.

So ſtately is compared by Milton.

She in ſtateſt covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Paradiſe Loſt.

And vivacious.

What ſhe wills to ſay or do,
Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt. Paradiſe Loſt.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not ſo decorous, in reſpect of God, that he ſhould immediately do all the meaneſt and trifingeſt things himſelf, without making uſe of any inferior or ſubordinate miniſter. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I ſhall be nam'd among the famouſeſt
Of women, ſung at ſolemn feſtivals. Milton's Agoniſtes.

Inventive, by Aſcham.

Thoſe have the inventiveſt heads for all purpoſes, and roundeſt tongues in all matters. Aſcham's Schoolmaſter.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortaleſt poiſons practiſed by the Weſt Indians, have ſome mixture of the blood, fat, or fleſh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I will now deliver a few of the propereſt and naturalleſt conſiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Architecture.

Wretched, by Jonſon.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things. Ben Jonſon.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath powr'fulleſt to ſend
Againſt us from about his throne. Paradiſe Loſt.

The

The termination ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, saltish, or having a little taste of salt. they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals, we, ye, they; it, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same, some.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of conversation, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, thou is disused.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without case or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours, of the third, from he, his; from she, her, and here, and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes

Our, your, their, ours, yours, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as This house is ours. That house are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in strength.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, no where in prose form plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as, This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine, thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine enemy, thine eyes, though now disused in prose, but both properly continued in poetry. they are used as ours and yours, and are referred to a substantive preceding, as thy house is larger than mine, but my garden is more spacious than thine.

Them and theirs are the possessives likewise of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whosoever, whatsoever.

Sing and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who	Nom.	Which
Gen.	Whose	Gen.	Of which, or whose
Other oblique cases.	Whom	Other oblique cases.	Which.

Who is now used in relation to persons, and which in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At least it was common to say, the man which, though I remember no example of the thing who.

Whose is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which.

> The fruit
> Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
> Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases, and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as Whether of these is left I know not. Whether shall I choose? It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whosoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and soever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not used but when it is referred to a substantive preceding, as I have sent other horses. I have not sent the same horses, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which signify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly, there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into neglect, though proper, useful, and analogous. They are referred both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, own and self.

Own is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatical, and implies a silent contrariety or opposition; as I live in my own house, that is, not in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourselves; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like own, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I did this myself, that is, not another, or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as We hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Hisself, myselves, theirselves, are supposed by Wallis to be put, by corruption, for her self, my selves, their selves; so that self is always a substantive. This seems in the observation to be true, He came himself, Himself shall do this, where himself can not be an accusative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love, I strike, I am now striking.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present, and the simple preterite; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense.

Sing. I have; thou hast; he hath or has;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently used both in verse and prose.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had; thou hadst; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had; thou hast had; he has or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had; thou hadst had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; thou shalt have; he shall have;
Plur. We shall have; ye shall have; they shall have.

Second

[illegible] ; they will have.

[illegible] be observed the variation of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

[illegible] ; let us have ;
[illegible], or have ye ; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

I [illegible], thou have ; he have ;
We [illegible], or have ye, they have.

Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had ; thou have had ; he have had ;
Plur. We have had ; ye have had ; they have had.

Future.

I shall have ; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

I shall have had ; thou shalt have had ; he shall have had ;
We shall have had ; ye shall have had ; they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present ; and might, could, or should, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have ; thou mayst have ; he may have ;
Plur. We may have ; ye may have ; they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have ; thou mightst have ; he might have ;
Plur. We might have ; ye might have ; they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have ; thou canst have ; he can have ;
Plur. We can have ; ye can have ; they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have ; thou couldst have ; he could have ;
Plur. We could have ; ye could have ; they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb.

There is likewise a double preterite.

Sing. I should have had ; thou shouldst have had ; he should have had ;
Plur. We should have had ; ye should have had ; they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had ; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have. Preterite To have had.
Participle present. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love ; thou loveſt ; he loveth, or loves ;
Plur. We love ; ye love ; they love.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I loved ; thou lovedſt ; he loved ;
Plur. We loved ; ye loved ; they loved.

Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.

Sing. I love ; thou love ; he love ;
Plur. We love ; ye love ; love, or love ye ; let them love.

Conjunctive Mood.

Sing. I love ; thou love ; he love ;
Plur. We love ; ye love ; they love.

Preterite simple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I shall love, &c.
Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or should love, &c.
Double Preterite. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle present. Loving. Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am ; thou art ; he is ;
Plur. We are, or be ; ye are, or be ; they are, or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterite simple.

Sing. I was ; thou waſt, or wert ; he was ;
Plur. We were ; ye were ; they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou ; let him be ;
Plur. Let us be ; be ye ; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be ; thou beeſt ; he be ;
Plur. We be ; ye be ; they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were ; thou wert ; he were ;
Plur. We were ; ye were ; they were.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can ; would, could, or should be ; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle present. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paſſive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, would or should be loved, &c.

Present. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another species of passive verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb to be, its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

Present.

Sing. I do; thou doſt, he doth;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did; thou didſt; he did;
Plur. We did; ye did; they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou; let him do;
Plur. Let us do; do ye; let them do.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. If I do; if thou do; if he do;
Plur. If we do; if ye do; if they do.

The reſt are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle preſent. Doing. Preterite. Done.

Do is ſometimes uſed emphatically, as I do love, I did love; ſimply for I love, or I loved; but this is conſidered as a vitious mode of ſpeech.

It is ſometimes uſed emphatically; as,

I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakeſpeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as I like her, but I do not love her; I aſſiſted him ſucceſs, but did not help him. This, by cuſtom at leaſt, appears more eaſy than the other form of expreſſing the ſame ſenſe by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The Imperative prohibitory is ſeldom applied in the ſecond perſon, at leaſt in proſe, without the word do; as Slay him, but do not hurt him; Praiſe beauty, but do not doat on it.

Its chief uſe is in interrogative forms of ſpeech, in which it is uſed through all the perſons; as Do I live? Doſt thou ſtrike me? Do they reſuſe? Did I complain? Didſt thou love her? Did ſhe die? So likewiſe in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did ſhe not die?

Do and did are thus uſed only for the preſent and ſimple preterite.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is uſed, may not improperly denominate them neuter paſſives, as they are inflected according to the paſſive form by the help of the verb ſubſtantive to be. They anſwer exactly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as

I am riſen, turned, Latin. Je me ſuis levé, French.
I was walked out, exclaims Je m'etois promené.

In like manner are conjugated the neuter verbs, as, I am going, I am growing, I am coming, I am ſetting, I am ſtanding, I am ſtopped, I am ſtopping, I am putting, I am ſitting, I am lying, I am walking, I am running, I am ſwimming, I am riding, I am ſailing, I am ſpringing, I am ſhrinking, I am ſinking, I am ſwelling, I am ſmiling, I am laughing, I am weeping, I am ſighing, I am ſobbing, I am ſhaking, I am trembling, I am ſhivering, I am ſhuddering, I am ſhaking, I am ſhuddering, I am ſhaking, I am ſhuddering, *I am ſhaking oak is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be uſed in poetry; at leaſt if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themſelves perhaps entitled to trample on grammarians.

There are are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, ſpin, begin, ſwim, ſtrike, ſtick, ſing, ſting, fling, ring, wring, ſpring, ſwing, drink, ſink, ſhrink, ſtink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite, imperfect, and participle paſſive, give, won, ſpun, begun, ſwum, ſtruck, ſtuck, ſung, ſtung, flung, rung, wrung, ſprung, ſwung, drunk, ſunk, ſhrunk, ſtunk, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And moſt of them are alſo formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, ſang, ſprang, drank, came, ran, and ſome others; but moſt of theſe are now obſolete. Some in the participle paſſive likewiſe take en, as ſtricken, ſtrucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, ſeek, beſeech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, ſought, beſought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of theſe retain likewiſe the regular form, as reached, reached, beſeeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, ſhake, forſake, wake, awake, ſtand, break, ſpeak, bear, ſhear, ſwear, tear, weave, cleave, ſtrive, thrive, drive, ſhine, riſe, ariſe, ſmite, write, bide, abide, ride, chooſe, chuſe, tread, get, beget, forget, ſeethe, make in both preterite and participle, took, forſook, woke, awoke, ſtood, broke, ſpoke, bore, ſhore, ſware, tore, wore, wove, clove, ſtrove, throve, drove, ſhone, roſe, aroſe, ſmote, wrote, bade, abode, rode, choſe, trode, got, begot, forgat, ſod. But we ſay likewiſe, thrived, riſ, ſmit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite ſome are likewiſe formed by a, as brake, ſpake, bare, ſhare, ſware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps ſome others, but more rarely. In the participle paſſive many of them are formed by en, as taken, ſhaken, forſaken, broken, ſpoken, born, ſhorn, ſworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, riſen, ſmitten, ridden, choſen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, ſodden. And many do likewiſe retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, ſhared, weaved, leaved, abided, ſeethed.

4. Give, bid, ſit, make in the preterite gave, bade, ſate; in the participle paſſive, given, bidden, ſitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow, like a cock, fly, ſlay, ſee, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, ſlew, ſaw, lay; their participles paſſive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown ſlain, ſeen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, the participle is gone.

Of Derivation.

That the Engliſh language may be more eaſily underſtood, it is neceſſary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I ſhall ſometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and ſometimes endeavour to ſupply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb, as done or produced, is commonly either the preſent of the verb; as to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to ſtrike, I ſtrick or ſtrook, a ſtroke.

The action is the ſame with the participle preſent, as loving, frighting, fighting, ſtriking.

The agent, or perſon acting, is denoted by the ſyllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, ſtriker.

Subſtantives, adjectives, and ſometimes other parts of ſpeech, are changed into verbs: in which caſe the vowel is often lengthened, or the conſonant ſoftened; as a houſe, to houſe; braſs, to braſs; glaſs, to glaſs; graſs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fiſh, to fiſh; oil, to oil; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, eſpecially to adjectives: as haſte, to haſten; length, to lengthen; ſtrength, to ſtrengthen; ſhort, to ſhorten; faſt, to faſten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; ſoft, to ſoften.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as a louſe, louſy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; luſt, luſty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; uſe, uſeful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almoſt the ſame ſenſe, but with ſome kind of diminution thereof, the termination ſome is added, denoting ſomething, or in ſome degree; as delight, delightſome; game, gameſome; irk, irkſome; burden, burdenſome; trouble, troubleſome; light, lightſome; hand, handſome; alone, loneſome; toil, toilſome.

On the contrary, the termination leſs added to ſubſtantives, makes adjectives ſignifying want; as worthleſs, witleſs, heartleſs, joyleſs, careleſs, helpleſs. Thus comfort, comfortleſs; ſap, ſapleſs.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as pleaſant, unpleaſant; wiſe, unwiſe; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unſuitful, unuſeful, and many more.

The original Engliſh privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its deſcendants, words already ſignifying privation, as ineffectual, imperfect, indirect, the inſeparable particles un and in have fallen into confuſion, from which it is not eaſy to diſentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally Engliſh; as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandſome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unaſſiſting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle preſent, to mark a forbearance of action, as unſighing, but a privation [illegible] as unpraying.

Un is prefixed to moſt ſubſtantives [illegible] an Engliſh termination, as unfertileneſs, unperfectneſs, which, if they [illegible] rowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; unmeaſ, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is uſual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecent, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepoſitive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, ſignify almoſt the ſame as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, ſince it anſwers to the Latin prepoſition de. Mis inſinuates ſome error, and for the moſt part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to diſlike; honour, diſhonour; to honour, to grace, to diſhonour, to diſgrace; to deign, to diſdeign; chance, hap, miſchance, miſhap; to take, to miſtake; deed, miſdeed; to uſe, to miſuſe; to employ, to miſemploy; to apply, to miſapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the ſame ſignification; as diſtinguiſh, diſtinguo; detract, detraho; defame; defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to ſubſtantives, and ſometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import ſome kind of ſimilitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The ſame termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like ſignification; as beautiful, beautifully; ſweet, ſweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with ſome degree of ſweetneſs.

The termination iſh added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to ſubſtantives, imports ſimilitude or tendency to a character; as green, greeniſh; white, whitiſh; ſoft, ſoftiſh; a thief, thieviſh; a wolf, wolviſh; a child, childiſh.

We have forms of diminutives in ſubſtantives, though not frequent; as a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel this is a French termination: a gooſe, a goſling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick, Hawkins; Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet

Yet ſtill there is another form of diminution among the Engliſh, by leſſening the ſound itſelf, eſpecially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that ſometimes not ſo much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as ſup, ſip, ſoop, ſop, ſippet, where, beſides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et; top, tip; ſpit, ſpout; babe, baby, booby, βαβαξ; great pronounced long, eſpecially if with a ſtronger ſound, great; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a ſucceſſion of ſmaller and then greater ſounds; and ſo in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words.

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore ſcarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abſtract ſubſtantives, by adding the termination neſs, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as white, whiteneſs; hard, hardneſs; great, greatneſs; ſkilful, ſkilfulneſs, unſkilfulneſs; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, prieſthood, likelihood, falſehood.

There are other abſtracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a ſmall change being ſometimes made; as long, length; ſtrong, ſtrength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; flow, flowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and ſo moon, month.

Like theſe are ſome words derived from verbs; die, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mow'th; commonly ſpoken and written later math, after math; ſteal, ſtealth; heal, hurt; rue, ruth; and probably earth from to eat or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

Theſe ſhould rather be written flighth, frigth, only that cuſtom will not ſuffer i to be twice repeated.

The ſame form retain faith, ſpight, wreath, wrath, broth, froth, breath, tooth, worth, light, weight, and the like, whoſe primitives are either entirely obſolete, or ſeldom occur. Perhaps theſe are derived from ſey or fy, ſpy, try, treat, throw, more fy, bray[illegible].

Some ending in ſhip imply an office, employment, or condition; as kingſhip, ſteadſhip, guardianſhip, partnerſhip, ſtewardſhip, headſhip, lordſhip.

Thus worſhip, that is, worthſhip; whence worſhipful, and to worſhip.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do eſpecially denote dominion, at leaſt ſtate or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, patriarchdom, chriſtendom, freedom, wiſdom, whoredom, bishoprick, bailiwick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the ſame import with us as among them, ſcarcely ever occurring, except in words derived from the French, as commandment, voyage.

There are in Engliſh often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation, as to beat, a bat, batoon, a battle, a battle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous compoſition for food, made by beating different bodies into one maſs. All theſe are of ſimilar ſignification, and perhaps derived from the Latin batuo. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twiſt, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more ſubtilety than ſolidity, and ſuch as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn uſually imply the noſe, and what relates to it. From the Latin naſus are derived the French nez and the Engliſh noſe; and neſſe, a promontory, as projecting like a noſe. But as if from the conſonants as taken from naſus, and tranſpoſed, that they may the better correſpond, ſn denote naſus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the noſe, as ſnout, ſneeze, ſnore, ſnort, ſneer, ſnicker, ſnot, ſnevil, ſnite, ſnuff, ſnuffle, ſnaffle, ſnarle, ſnudge.

There is another ſn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin, ſinus, as ſnake, ſneck, ſnail, ſnare; ſo likewiſe ſnap and ſnatch, ſnib, ſnub.

Bl imply a blaſt; as blow, blaſt, to blaſt, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blaſt one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluſter; blurt, bliſter, blub, bladder, blab, bliſter, blabber-lip'd, blubber-cheek'd, blated, blute herrings, blaſt, blaze, to blaze, that is, bluſſom, bloom; and perhaps blood and bluſh.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the things ſignified; and therefore the ſounds of letters ſmaller, ſharper, louder, more, ſofter, ſtronger, clearer, more obſcure, and more ſtridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things ſignified.

Thus words that begin with ſtr intimate the force and effect of the thing ſignified, as if probably derived from ςρόνυμι, or ſtrenuus; as ſtrong, ſtrength, ſtrew, ſtrike, ſtreake, ſtroke, ſtripe, ſtrive, ſtiffe, ſtruggle, ſtrout, ſtut, ſtretch, ſtrait, ſtrict, ſtreight, that is, narrow, diſtrain, ſtreſt, diſtreſs, ſtring, ſtrap, ſtream, ſtreamer, ſtrand, ſtrip, ſtray, ſtruggle, ſtrange, ſtride, ſtraddle.

St in like manner imply ſtrength, but in a leſs degree, ſo much only as is ſufficient to preſerve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin ſto: for example, ſtand, ſtay, that is, to remain, or to prop; ſtaff, ſtay, that is, to oppoſe; ſtop, to ſtuff, ſtifle, to ſtay, that is, to ſtop; a ſtay, that is, an obſtacle; ſtick, ſtut, ſtutter, ſtammer, ſtagger, ſtickle, ſtick, ſtake, a ſharp pale, and any thing depoſited at play; ſtock, ſtem, ſting, to ſting, ſtink, ſtitch, ſtud, ſtanchion, ſtub, ſtubble, to ſtub up, ſtump, whence ſtumble, ſtalk, to ſtalk, ſtop, to ſtamp with the feet, whence to ſtamp, that is, to make an impreſſion and a ſtamp; ſtow, to ſtow, to beſtow, ſteward or ſtoward, ſtead, ſtoady, ſteadfaſt, ſtable, a ſtable, a ſtall, to ſtall, ſtool, ſtall, ſtill, ſtall, ſtallage, ſtall, ſtage, ſtill adj. and ſtill adv. ſtale, ſtunt, ſturdy, ſteed, ſtout, ſtallion, ſtiff, ſtark-dead, to ſtarve with hunger or cold; ſtone, ſtout, ſtern, ſtanch, to ſtanch blood, to ſtare, ſteep, ſteeple, ſtair, ſtandard, a ſtated meaſure, ſtately. In all theſe, and perhaps ſome others, ſt denote ſomething firm and fixed.

Thr imply a more violent degree of motion, as threw, thruſt, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply ſome ſort of obliquity or diſtortion, as wry, to wreathe, wreſt, wreſtle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wracky, wretch, wreſt, wrap.

Sw imply a ſlight agitation, or a ſofter kind of lateral motion; as ſway, ſwag, to ſway, ſwagger, ſwerve, ſweat, ſweep, ſwell, ſwim, ſwing, ſwift, ſweet, ſwitch, ſwinge.

Nor is there much diffidence of ſm in ſmoothe, ſmug, ſmile, ſmirk, ſmite, which ſignifies the ſame as to ſtrike, but is a ſofter word; ſmall, ſmall, ſmack, ſmother, ſmart, a ſmart blow properly ſignifies ſuch a kind of ſtroke as with an originally ſilent motion, implied in ſm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar ſuddenly ended, as is ſhewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adheſion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, claſp, to claſp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, cloſe, to cloſe, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluſter.

Sp imply a kind of diſſipation or expanſion, eſpecially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from ſpargo, or ſeparo: for example, ſpread, ſpring, ſprig, ſprout, ſprinkle, ſplit, ſpinter, ſpill, ſpit, ſputter, ſpatter.

Sl denote a kind of ſilent fall, or a leſs obſervable motion; as in ſlime, ſlide, ſlip, ſlipper, ſly, ſlight, ſlit, ſlow, ſlack, ſlight, ſling, ſlap.

And to likewiſe aſh, in cruſh, puſh, gaſh, flaſh, claſh, laſh, ſtaſh, plaſh, traſh, indicate ſomething acting more nimbly and ſharply. But uſh, in cruſh, puſh, guſh, ſtuſh, bluſh, bruſh kuſh, puſh, implies ſomething as acting more obtuſely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a ſwift and ſudden motion, not inſtantaneous, but gradual, by the continued ſound ſh.

Thus in fling, ſling, ding, ſwing, cling, ſing, wring, ſting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the ſharpneſs of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very ſlender motion or tremor, at length indeed vaniſhing, but not ſuddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, ſink, clink, blink, think, that end in a mute conſonant, there is alſo indicated a ſudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, ſprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of ſmall acts. And the ſame frequency of acts but leſs ſubtile by reaſon of the cleaner vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, ſpangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as alſo in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, ſtumble, rumble, crumble, fumble. But at the ſame time the cloſe implies ſomething obſcure or obtunded; and a congeries of conſonants mbl, denotes a confuſed kind of rolling or tumbling, as in rumble, ſcamble, ſcramble, ſcumble, amble; but in theſe there is ſomething acute.

In nimble, the acuteneſs of the vowel denotes celerity. In ſparkle, ſp denotes diſſipation, ar an acute crackling, k a ſudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in ſprinkle, unleſs in may imply the ſubtility of the diſſipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuſe conſonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in ſqueek, ſquak, ſqueal, ſquall, bawl, wrawl, yawl, ſcrawl, ſcreek, ſhriek, ſhrill, ſharp, ſhrivel, wrinkle, crack, crumple, cluſter, graſp, puſh, truſh, buſh, hiſſe, fiſſe, whiſt, ſoft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buzz, buſtle, ſpinne, dwindle, twine, twiſt, and in many more, we may obſerve the agreement of ſuch ſort of ſounds with the things ſignified: and this ſo frequently happens, that ſcarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monoſyllable word, of which kind are almoſt all ours, emphatically expreſſes what in other languages can ſcarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or ſometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greateſt part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, reſemble.

Some verbs, which ſeem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the preſent tenſe, and ſome from the ſupine.

From the preſent are formed ſpend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; deſpiſe, deſpicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the supines, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; disposed dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, suppremo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in queſt of originals. Many of theſe which ſeem ſelected as immediate deſcendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expoſe, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French, jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of theſe, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from ſome common original; as wine; vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; waſp, veſpa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζεύγος; over, upper, ſuper, ὑπερ; am, ſum, εἰμι; break, frango; fly, volo, blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no leſs certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, eſpecially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oſcan and others, which have long become obſolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the Engliſh, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained ſome derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, axis, mast, ford, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mangle, moon, fear, grave, graff, to grave, to ſcrape, whole, from ἄξων, μεταξὺ, σφυρὸς, θυγατὴρ, μεγάλος, μείζων, μὴν, ξυρὸς, γράφω, ὅλος. Since they received theſe immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the ſame fountain, though they be likewiſe found among the Latins?

Our anceſtors were ſtudious to form borrowed words, however long, into monoſyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the firſt ſyllable, eſpecially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewiſe conſonants of a weaker ſound, retaining the ſtronger, which ſeem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the ſame organ, in order that the ſound might become the ſofter; but eſpecially tranſpoſing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, ſpend; exemplum, ſample; excipio, ſcape; extraneus, ſtrange; extractum, ſtretch'd; excrucio, to ſcreen; exſcorio, to ſcour; excorio, to ſcourge; excoriico, to ſcratch; and others beginning with ex: as alſo, emendo, to mend; epiſcopus, biſhop; in Daniſh, biſp; epiſtola, epiſtle; hoſpitale, ſpittle; Hiſpania, Spain; hiſtoria, ſtory.

Many of theſe etymologies are doubtful, and ſome evidently miſtaken.

The following are ſomewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Eliſabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p paſſing into b, as in biſhop; and by cutting off a from the beginning, which is reſtored in the middle: but for the old bar or bare, we now ſay boar; as for long, long; for bain, bane; for ſtane, ſtone; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a tranſpoſed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn, lege, law; ἀλωπὴξ, fox; cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pellis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; pavor, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piſcis, fiſh; and tranſposing v into the middle, which was taken from the beginning, apex, a piece; peak, pike; zophorus, freeze; muſtum, ſtum; defenſio, fence; diſpenſator, ſpencer, alſculto, eſcouter, Fr. ſcut; exſcalpo, ſcrape, reſtoring l inſtead of r, and hence ſtrap, ſcrable, ſcrawl; excalpo, ſcoop; exteritus, ſtart; extonitus, attonitus, ſtonn'd; ſtomachus, maw; offendo, fineſs; obſtipo, ſtop; audere, dare; cavere, wage; whence, a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning, for the Latin v conſonant formerly ſounded like our w, and the modern ſound of the v conſonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the ſound of φ, and the modern ſound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ, or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, ſore, and hence ſorry, ſorrow, ſorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; ſcalenus, leaning, unleſs you would rather derive it from κλίνω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jett forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are ſyncopes ſomewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; πρεσβύτης, pot; καπέλλα, cap; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; ſpecio, ſpeculor, ſpy; plico, ply; ſimplico, imply; precor, pray; replico, reply; complico, comply; ſedes epiſcopalis, ſee.

A vowel is alſo cut off in the middle, that the number of the ſyllables may be leſſened; as amita, aunt; ſpiritus, ſpright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comes, count; electus clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, acquaint; ſeparo, to ſpare; ſtabilis, ſtable; ſtabulum, ſtable; pallatium, palace, place; rabula, rail; rawl, wraul, brawl, rable, brable; quæſtio, queſt.

As alſo a conſonant, or at leaſt one of a ſofter ſound, or even a whole ſyllable; rotundus, round; ἀγιλλις, ſtail; ſecurus, ſure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; ſubtilis, ſubtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; ſubitaneus, ſuddain, ſoon; ſuperare, to ſoar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, deign; tingo, ſtain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædark, reach.

The contractions may ſeem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακὸς, kyrk, church; preſbyter, prieſt; ſacriſtanus, ſexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φηγὸς, beech; f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigeſco, freeze; frigeſco, freeſe, ſc into ſh, as above in biſhop, fiſh, ſo in ſcapha, ſkiff, ſkip, and refrigeſco, refreſh; but vireſco, freſh; phlebotomus, fleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; ſcutifer, ſquire; pœnitentia, penance; ſanctuarium, ſanctuary, ſentry; quæſitio, chaſe; perquiſitio, purchaſe; anguilla, eel; inſula, iſle, ile, iſland, iland; inſuletta, iſlet, ilet; eyght, and more contractedly ey, whence Orcney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to ſcan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the uſual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not uſe x, write ſcamen, or ſcamen, is contracted into ſcan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed apum examen they turned into ſcarme; for which we ſay ſwarm, by inſerting r to denote the murmuring; theſaurus, ſtore; fedde, ſtud; vertex, wet; ſudo, ſweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; ſuccus, juice; caterva, crowd; caliga, calga, chauſe, chauſſe, Fr. boſe; extinguo, ſtanch, ſquench, quench, ſtint; foras, forth; ſpecies, ſpice; recito, read; adjuvo, aid, avo, avum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, ſcrape, ſcrabble, ſcrawl, extraho, ſtray, ſtraggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; fevero, fever; ſtridulus, ſtrill; procurator, proxy; pulſo, to puſh; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vaneſco, vanui, wane; ſybilare, to ſpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crimple.

Some may think harſher, yet may not be rejected, for all leaſt year, that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and that ſome even whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as Alexander, Lick, Sander, Sandy, Saun; Eliſabetha, Elizabeth, Eliſabeth, Betty, Bet, Bett, Betſy, Margaret, Margit, Meg, Peg, Maria, Mary, Moll, Polly, Marian, Marvel, Matthæus, Matthew, Matthy; Matilda, Maud, Patty, Tilly, Wilhelmus, Gwilliam, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wilcox, Wills, Wilcox.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; geroſilo, Ital. girofice, giloſer, Fr. gilofle, which the vulgar call julyflower, as it received from the French Julye, ſome name, parſly; portulaca, purſlain; cydonium, quince; cydoneum, quidney, quidney-cum, pear; ernea, crane, which they ſay is not to be ſeen in England, the name from the cry, annulus gemmeus, a gimmal ring, and the word gimbal and gimbal in mariners language, many others, however quelques chefs, Leſſarum. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however ſeeming, is evident, it ought to be a reaſon to any one of the ancient, have thus diſfigured many, eſpecially as the words affected in monoſyllables, and, to make them ſound the ſofter, to make them of more eaſy taſte, away; changing, tranſpoſing, and ſometimes

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I would not have any one think that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, and Teutonick language and other dialects, and ſome taken to us immediately from the French, or Italians, or Spaniards.

The ſame words, according to its different ſignifications, often have a different origin; as to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, a beaſt, ours, bearn, comes from parit; and a bear, at leaſt if it be of Latin original, from perna. Thus perch, a fiſh, from perca, but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllabo, but ſpell, a charm, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in Ireland, that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger, from euangelium; whence goſpel, good ſpell, or god ſpell. Thus freeze, or freeſe, from frigeſco, but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeſe, for cloth, from Friſia, or perhaps from frigeſco, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monoſyllables, compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and comprising the ſignification of more words than one; as from ſcript and roll, comes ſcroll; from ſtand and dance, prance; from ſt of the verb ſtay, or ſtand and out, is made ſtout; from ſtout and hardy, ſturdy; from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp, with the termination in, is ſpin; and adding out, ſpin out; and from the ſame ſp, with it, is ſplit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force; but ſputter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely confuſed: whereas ſpatter, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, in which it chiefly differs from ſputter. From the ſame ſp, and the termination ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emiſſion of fire with a noiſe; namely, ſp the emiſſion, ar the more acute noiſe, and k the mute conſonant, intimates its being ſuddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative ſparkle. The ſame ſp, by adding r, that is ſpr, implies a more lively impetus of diffuſing or expanding itſelf; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes ſpring; its vigour ſpr imports, its ſharpneſs the termination ing; and laſtly in acute and tremulous, ending in the mute conſonant g, denotes the ſudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary ſignification, of a ſingle, not a complicated exiſtition. Hence we call ſpring whatever has an elaſtic force; as alſo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to ſpring, to germinate; and ſpring, one of the four ſeaſons. From the ſame ſpr and out, is formed sprout, and with the termination g, sprig; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: sprout, of a groſſer ſound, imports a fatter or groſſer bud; ſprig, of a ſlenderer ſound, denotes a ſmaller ſhoot. In like manner, from ſtr of the verb ſtrive, and out, comes ſtrout and ſtrut. From the ſame ſtr, and the termination uggle, is made ſtruggle; and this g imports, but without any great noiſe, by reaſon of the obſcure ſound of the vowel u. In like manner from throw and roll is made troll; and almoſt in the ſame ſenſe is trundle, from throw, or thruſt, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In theſe obſervations it is eaſy to diſcover great ſagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the deſire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often ſo made, that by the ſame licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no diſtinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thoſe which, being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Engliſh language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harſhneſs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That ſome of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The [illegible] grammarian, requires that I ſhould here treat of the [illegible] language has ſo little inflection, or variety of terminations, that [illegible] neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore [illegible] neglected it; and Jonſon, whoſe deſire of following the [illegible] made him think a ſyntax indiſpenſably neceſſary, has [illegible] which were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perſon; as I run faſt, you run faſter, he runs faſteſt; We ſhall find it good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two ſubſtantives the noun poſſeſſive or the genitive, as His father's glory, The ſun's heat.

Verbs tranſitive require an oblique caſe, as He loves me; You ſtrike him.

All prepoſitions require an oblique caſe: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He plays this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for thoſe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Proſody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomatei; that of the French by Regnier; and that of the Engliſh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Jonſon, though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to inſert them.

Proſody compriſes orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of verſification.

PRONUNCIATION is juſt, when every letter has its proper ſound, and when every ſyllable has its proper accent, or, which in Engliſh verſification is the ſame, its proper quantity.

The ſounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not eaſily to be given, being ſubject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I ſhall here propoſe.

1. Of diſſyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former ſyllable is commonly accented, as childiſh, kingdom, latteſt, acted, toilſome, lover, ſcoffer, fairer, foremoſt, zealous, fulneſs, gaily, meekly, artiſt.

2. Diſſyllables formed by prefixing a ſyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as to begét, to beſeém, to beſtów.

3. Of diſſyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former ſyllable; as to diſcánt, a diſcant; to combat, a combat; to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs ſeldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter ſyllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All diſſyllables ending in y, as crúmmy; in our, as láboure, fávour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bible; in iſh, as bániſh; in ck, as cámbrick, cáſſock; in ter, as to báſter; in age, as cóinage; in en, as fáſten; in et, as quiet, accent the former ſyllable.

5. Diſſyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bátter, have the accent on the former ſyllable.

6. Diſſyllable verbs terminating in a conſonant and e final, as compríſe, eſcápe; or having a diphthong in the laſt ſyllable, as appéaſe, revéal; or ending in two conſonants, as attend, have the accent on the latter ſyllable.

7. Diſſyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter ſyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter ſyllable, as applauſe; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Triſſyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a ſyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelineſs, téndereſs, cantónour, wágoner, phyſical, beſpátter, cómmenting, commánding, aſſurance.

9. Triſſyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as mántion, accent the firſt.

10. Triſſyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firſt ſyllable, as cóuntenance, cóntinence, órnament, imminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laſt, as connivance, acquáintance; or the middle ſyllable hath a vowel before two conſonants, as prémiſgate.

11. Triſſyllables ending in y, as éntity, ſpécify, liberty, victory, ſubſidy, commonly accent the firſt ſyllable.

12. Triſſyllables in re or le accent the firſt ſyllable, as légible, théatre; except diſciple, and ſome words which have a poſition, as exámple, epiſtle.

13. Triſſyllables in ude commonly accent the firſt ſyllable, as plénitude.

14. Triſſyllables ending in ator or atour, as creátour; or having in the middle ſyllable a diphthong, as endéavour; or a vowel before two conſonants, as doméſtick, accent the middle ſyllable.

15. Triſſyllables that have their accent on the laſt ſyllable are commonly French, as acquiéſce, repartée, magazine; or words formed by prefixing one or two ſyllables to an acute ſyllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polyſyllables, or words of more than three ſyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, commendable, communicableneſs. We ſhould therefore ſay diſpútable, indiſputable, rather than diſputable, indiſputable; and advertiſement rather than advértiſement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as ſalvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as ámicable, unleſs the ſecond ſyllable have a vowel before two conſonants, as combuſtible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as móroſous, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as puſillanimity, activity.

Theſe rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but propoſed as uſeful. Almoſt every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in Engliſh, as in other tongues, much muſt be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have eſcaped my obſervation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of ſyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verſes are either iambick, as alóft, create; or trochaick, as háſty, lófty.

Our

Our iambic meaſure compriſes verſes

Of four ſyllables.

Moſt good, moſt fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's loſt;
For all the coſt
Words can beſtow,
So poorly ſhow
Upon your praiſe,
That all the ways
Senſe hath, come ſhort. Drayton.

With raviſh'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of ſix,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not ſing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that ſtrongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmoſt Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongſt the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to ſleet and rain,
No ſport our hours ſhall break,
To exerciſe our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refreſh the ſouthern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's ſtreams
Be many wonders found:

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in ſilver ſwathes,
And what of all moſt dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble cheer,
T' aſſwage breem winter's ſcathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obſcure,
Where wholſom is the air,
Or where the moſt impure,
All times, and every where,
The muſe is ſtill in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the uſual meaſure for ſhort poems,

And may at laſt my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and moſſy cell,
Where I may ſit, and nightly ſpell
Of ev'ry ſtar the ſky doth ſhew,
And ev'ry herb that ſips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common meaſure of heroick and tragick poetry,

Full in the midſt of this created ſpace,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and ſkies, there ſtands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating ſound.
The palace of loud Fame, her ſeat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the ſummit of a lofty tow'r;
A thouſand winding entries long and wide
Receive freſh reports a flowing tide.
A thouſand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the buſy trade.
'Tis built of braſs, the better to diffuſe
The ſpreading ſounds, and multiply the news;
Where echoes in repeated echoes play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor ſilence is within, nor voice expreſs,
But a deaf noiſe of ſounds that never ceaſe;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' inſulted ſhore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to diſtance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crowds, or iſſuing forth, or ent'ring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where ſome deviſe
Things never heard, ſome mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty ſounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all theſe meaſures the accents are to be placed on even ſyllables; and every line conſidered by itſelf is more harmonious, as this rule is more ſtrictly obſerved. The variations neceſſary to pleaſure belong to the art of poetry, not the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick meaſures are

Of three ſyllables,

Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath.
Other joys
Are but toys, Walton's Angler.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy. Old Ballad.

Of ſeven,

Faireſt piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

In theſe meaſures the accent is to be placed on the odd ſyllables.

Theſe are the meaſures which are now in uſe, and above the reſt thoſe of ſeven, eight, and ten ſyllables. Our ancient poets wrote verſes ſometimes of twelve ſyllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian ſhires their heads that bear ſo high,
And farth'ſt ſurvey their ſoils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchleſs crowds,
The neareſt that are ſaid to kiſs the wand'ring clouds,
Eſpecial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That ſhe of all the reſt neglected was ſo long;
Alleging for herſelf, when through the Saxon's pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's fetring ſide
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Thoſe whom devouring war elſe every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beſide (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe reſigned her ancient right,
A conſtant maiden ſtill ſhe only did remain,
The laſt her genuine laws which ſtoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for her peculiar things,
So only ſhe is rich in mountains, meres, and ſprings;
And holds herſelf as great in her ſuperfluous waſte,
As others by their towns and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of ſuch a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or elſe would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is diſtract.

The meaſures of twelve and fourteen ſyllables were often mingled by our old poets, ſometimes in alternate lines, and ſometimes in alternate couplets.

The

The verſe of twelve ſyllables, called an Alexandrine, is now only uſed to diverſify heroick lines.

> Waller was ſmooth, but Dryden taught to join
> The varying verſe, the full-reſounding line,
> The long majeſtic march, and energy divine. Pope.

The pauſe in the Alexandrine muſt be at the ſixth ſyllable.

The verſe of fourteen ſyllables is now broken into a ſoft lyrick meaſure of verſes conſiſting alternately of eight ſyllables and ſix.

> She to receive thy radiant name,
> Selects a whiter ſpace. Fantom.
> When all ſhall praiſe, and ev'ry lay
> Devote a wreath to thee,
> That day, for come it will, that day
> Shall I lament to ſee. Lewis to Pope.
> Beneath this tomb an infant lies
> To earth whoſe body lent,
> Hereafter ſhall more glorious riſe,
> But not more innocent.
> When the Archangel's trump ſhall blow,
> And ſouls to bodies join,
> What crowds ſhall wiſh their lives below
> Had been as ſhort as thine! Weſley.

We have another meaſure very quick and lively, and therefore much uſed in ſongs, which may be called the anapeſtick, in which the accent reſts upon every third ſyllable.

> May I govern my paſſions with abſolute ſway,
> And grow wiſer and better as life wears away. Dr. Pope.

In this meaſure a ſyllable is often retrenched from the firſt foot, as > Diogenes ſurly and proud. Dr. Pope.

> When preſent we love, and when abſent agree,
> I think not of Iris, nor Iris of me. Dryden.

Theſe meaſures are varied by many combinations, and ſometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick meaſure.

> 'Tis the Divinity that ſtirs within us,
> 'Tis Heav'n itſelf that points out an hereafter,
> And intimates eternity to man. Addiſon.

So in that of eight ſyllables,

> They neither added nor confounded,
> They neither wanted nor abounded. Prior.

In that of ſeven,

> For reſiſtance I could fear none,
> But with twenty ſhips had done,
> What thou brave and happy Vernon,
> Haſt atchiev'd with ſix alone. Glover.

In that of ſix,

> 'Twas when the ſeas were roaring,
> With hollow blaſts of wind,
> A damſel lay deploring,
> All on a rock reclin'd. Gay.

In the anapeſtick,

> When terrible tempeſts aſſail us,
> And mountainous billows affright,
> Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
> But ſkilful induſtry ſteers right. Ballad.

To theſe meaſures, and their laws, may be reduced every ſpecies of Engliſh verſe.

Our verſification admits of few licences, except a ſynalœpha, or eliſion of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t' accept; and a ſynereſis, by which two ſhort vowels coaleſce into one ſyllable, as queſtion, ſpecial; or a word is contracted by the expulſion of a ſhort vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the Engliſh language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a maſter to thoſe that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for ſuch as are not yet initiated in the ſchools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at laſt ineffectual.

MANY are the works of human induſtry, which to begin and finiſh are hardly granted to the ſame man. He that undertakes to compile a Dictionary, undertakes that, which, if it comprehends the full extent of his deſign, he knows himſelf unable to perform. Yet his labours, though deficient, may be uſeful, and with the hope of this inferior praiſe, he muſt incite his activity, and ſolace his wearineſs.

Perfection is unattainable, but nearer and nearer approaches may be made; and finding my Dictionary about to be reprinted, I have endeavoured, by a reviſal, to make it leſs reprehenſible. I will not deny that I found many parts requiring emendation, and many more capable of improvement. Many faults I have corrected, ſome ſuperfluities I have taken away, and ſome deficiencies I have ſupplied. I have methodiſed ſome parts that were diſordered, and illuminated ſome that were obſcure. Yet the changes or additions bear a very ſmall proportion to the whole. The critick will now have leſs to object, but the ſtudent who has bought any of the former copies needs not repent; he will not, without nice collation, perceive how they differ; and uſefulneſs ſeldom depends upon little things.

For negligence or deficience, I have perhaps not need of more apology than the nature of the work will furniſh: I have left that inaccurate which was never made exact, and that imperfect which never was completed.

A DIC-

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, The firſt letter of the European alphabets, has, in the Engliſh language, three different ſounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and ſlender.

The broad ſound, reſembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monoſyllables, as all, wall, malt, ſalt, in which a is pronounced as au in cauſe, or aw in law. Many of theſe words were anciently written with au, as fault, vaulk; which happens to be ſtill retained in fault. This was probably the ancient ſound of the Saxons, ſince it is almoſt uniformly preſerved in the ruſtic pronunciation, and the Northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obſcurely in fancy, faſt, &c.

A ſlender or cloſe, is the peculiar a of the Engliſh language, reſembling the ſound of the French e maſculine, or diphthong ai in païs, or perhaps a middle ſound between them, or between the a and e; to this the Arabic a is ſaid nearly to approach. Of this ſound we have examples in the words, place, face, waſte, and all thoſe that terminate in ation; as relation, nation, generation.

A is ſhort, as, glaſs, graſs; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as plain. The ſhort a is open, the long a cloſe.

1. A, an article ſet before nouns of the ſingular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way, that is, any man. This article has no plural ſignification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

2. A, taken materially, or for itſelf, is a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

3. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is conſidered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting ſome action not yet finiſhed; as, I am a walking. It alſo ſeems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local ſurnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other caſes, it ſeems to ſignify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloe went. Prior.

They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryden.

May peace ſtill ſlumber by theſe purling fountains!
Which we may every year
Find when we come a fiſhing here. Wotton.

Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

He will knap the ſpears a pieces with his teeth. Mede's Antiq. Athen.

Another falls a ringing a Peſcennius Niger, and judiciouſly diſtinguiſhes the ſound of it to be modern. Addiſon on Medals.

4. A has a peculiar ſignification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we ſay, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ſhip's crew gained a thouſand pounds a man.

The river Inn paſſes through a wide open country, during all its courſe through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addiſon on Italy.

5. A is uſed in burleſque poetry, to lengthen out a ſyllable, without adding to the ſenſe.

For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a,
And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

6. A is ſometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for be; as, will a come, for will be come.

7. A, in compoſition, ſeems to have ſometimes the power of the French a in theſe phraſes, a droit, a gauche, &c. and ſometimes to be contracted from at; as, aſide, aſlope, afoot, aſleep, athirſt, aware.

I 'gin to be a weary of the ſun;
And wiſh the ſtate of th' world were now undone. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from ſhore began to blow,
The ſailors ſhip their oars, and ceaſe to row;
Then hoiſt their yards a-trip, and all their ſails
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales. Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A little houſe with trees a row,
And, like its maſter, very low. Pope, Hor.

8. A is ſometimes redundant; as, ariſe, arouſe, awake; the ſame with riſe, rouſe, wake.

9. A, in abbreviations, ſtands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. batchelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. maſter of arts, artium magiſter; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally ſhews that they have ſome relation to an abbey, as Abingdon. Gibſon.

ABA'CKE. adv. [from back.] Backwards. Obſolete.

But when they came where thou thy ſkill didſt ſhow,
They drew abacke, as half with ſhame confound. Spenſ. Paſt.

ABACTOR, n. ſ. [Latin.] One who drives away or ſteals cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in diſtinction from thoſe that ſteal only a ſheep or two. Blount.

A'BACUS. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. A counting-table, anciently uſed in calculations.

2. [In architecture.] The uppermoſt member of a column, which ſerves as a ſort of crowning both to the capital and column. Dict.

ABA'FT. adv. [of abaſtean, Sax. behind.] From the fore-part of the ſhip, towards the ſtern. Dict.

ABAI'SANCE. n. ſ. [from the French abaiſſer, to depreſs, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeyſance is conſidered by Skinner as a corruption of abaiſance, but is now univerſally uſed.

To ABA'LIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. A term of the civil law, not much uſed in common ſpeech.

ABALIENA'TION. n. ſ. [Lat. abalienatio.] The act of giving up one's right to another perſon; or a making over an eſtate, goods, or chattels by ſale, or due courſe of law. Dict.

To ABA'ND. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in uſe. See ABANDON.] To forſake.

Thy ſtronger are
Than they which fought at firſt their helping hand,
And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 10.

To ABA'NDON. v. a. [Fr. abandonner. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which ſignifies to forſake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deſerere. Paſquier thinks it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proſcription; in which ſenſe we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, ſignifies a curſe; and to abandon, if conſidered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

1. To give up, reſign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.

If ſhe be ſo abandon'd to her ſorrow,
As it is ſpoke, ſhe never will admit me.
Shakſp. Twelfth Night.

The paſſive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the ſpoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conſpire
To ſave a ſinking town, involv'd in fire.
Dryd. Æntid.

Who is he ſo abandoned to ſottiſh credulity, as to think, that a clod of earth in a ſack, may ever, by eternal ſhaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Muſt he, whoſe altars on the Phrygian ſhore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worſt of human ills to prove,
Unbleſs'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyſſey, b. i. l. 80.

2. To deſert; to forſake: in an ill ſenſe.

The princes uſing the paſſions of fearing evil, and deſiring to eſcape, only to ſerve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's ſelf, leapt to a rib of the ſhip. Sidney, b. ii.

Seeing the hurt ſtag alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus miſery doth part
The flux of company. Shakſp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends.
Dryd. Æneid, 2.

But to the parting goddeſs thus ſhe pray'd;
Propitious ſtill be preſent to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once-favour'd maid.
Dryd. Fab.

3. To forſake, to leave.

He boldly ſpake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this foreſtalled place at erſt,
For fear of further harm, I counſel thee.
Spenſer's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. ſtanza 39.

To ABANDON OVER. v. a. [a form of writing not uſual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to reſign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but diſturb the quiet of my death.
Dryd. Sp. Friar.

ABA'NDONED. particip. adj. Corrupted in the higheſt degree; as, an abandoned wretch. In this ſenſe, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedneſs.

ABA'NDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Deſertion, forſaking.

He hop'd his paſt meritorious actions might outweigh his preſent abandoning the thought of future action. Clarend. b. viii.

ABA'NDONMENT. n. ſ. [abandonnement, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2. The ſtate of being abandoned. Dict.

ABANNI'TION. n. ſ. [Lat. abannitio.] A baniſhment for one or two years, for manſlaughter. Obſolete. Dict.

To ABA'RE. v. a. [abaman, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or diſcloſe. Dict.

ABARTICULA'TION. n. ſ. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt conſtruction of the bones, by which they move ſtrongly and eaſily; or that ſpecies of articulation that has manifeſt motion. Dict.

To ABA'SE. v. a. [Fr. abaiſſer, from the Lat. baſis, or baſſus, a barbarous word, ſignifying low, baſe.]

1. To depreſs, to lower.

It is a point of cunning to wait upon him with whom you ſpeak with your eye; yet with a demure abaſing of it ſometimes. Bacon.

2. To caſt down, to depreſs, to bring low; in a figurative and perſonal ſenſe, which is the common uſe.

Happy ſhepherd, to the gods be thankful, that to thy advancement their wiſdoms have thee abaſed.
Sidney, b. i.

Behold every one that is proud, and abaſe him.
Job, xl. 11.

With unreſiſted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raiſes plains;
And, not regarding diſtinction of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me.
Dryd. Fables.

If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their ſpirits be abated and broken much by too ſtrict an hand over them; they loſe all their vigour and induſtry.
Locke on Education, § 46.

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds] a term uſed of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the ſhield; or when the wings are ſhut; the natural way of bearing them being ſpread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT. n. ſ. The ſtate of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depreſſion.

There is an abaſement becauſe of glory; and there is that lifteth up his head from a low eſtate.
Eccleſiaſticus, xx. 11.

To ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL. Perhaps from abaiſſer, French.]

1. To put into confuſion; to make aſhamed. It generally implies a ſudden impreſſion of ſhame.

They heard, and were abaſh'd.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen ſat mute with fear;
Nor further durſt inceniſe the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abaſh'd, ſuſtain their ſovereign's look. Dryden's Fables.

2. The paſſive admits the particle at, ſometimes of, before the cauſal noun.

In no wiſe ſpeak againſt the truth, but be abaſhed of the error of thy ignorance. Eccluſ. iv. 25.

I ſaid unto her, From whence is this kid? Is it not ſtolen? But ſhe replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however, I did not believe her, and I was abaſhed at her.
Tob. ii. 13, 14.

In the admiration only of weak minds
Led captive: ceaſe t' admire, and all her plumes
Fall flat, and ſink into a trivial toy,
At every ſudden ſlighting quite abaſht.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 223.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abaſh'd at what they ſaw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd.
Swift's Miſcellanies.

To ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abbatre, to beat down.]

1. To leſſen, to diminiſh.

Who can tell whether the divine wiſdom, to abate the glory of thoſe kings, did not reſerve this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work?
Sir J. Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the ſtrength of your diſpleaſure.
Shakſpeare.

Here we ſee the hopes of great benefit and light from expoſitors and commentators, are in a great part abated; and thoſe who have moſt need of their help, can receive but little from them.
Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

2. To deject, or depreſs the mind.

This iron world
Brings down the ſtouteſt hearts to loweſt ſtate:
For miſery doth braveſt minds abate.
Spenſ. Hubberd's Tale.

Have the power ſtill
To baniſh your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As moſt abated captive to ſome nation
That won you without blows!
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Time, that changes all, yet changes not in vain,
The body, not the mind, nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the ſoul.
Dryd. Æneid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in ſelling, ſometimes to beat down the price in buying.

To ABA'TE. v. n.

1. To grow leſs; as, his paſſion abates; the ſtorm abates. It is uſed ſometimes with the particle of before the thing leſſened.

Our phyſicians have obſerved, that in proceſs of time, ſome diſeaſes have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, ſo as to be no longer mortal.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. [In common law.]

It is in law uſed both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a caſtle, to beat it down. To abate a writ, is, by ſome exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A ſtranger abateth, that is, entereth upon a houſe or land void by the death of him that laſt poſſeſſed it, before the heir take his poſſeſſion, and ſo keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in poſſeſſion, is ſaid to diſſeiſe: ſo he that ſtepperth in between the former poſſeſſor and his heir is ſaid to abate. In the neuter ſignification thus: The writ of the demandment ſhall abate, that is, ſhall be diſabled, fruſtrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin, that is, that the accuſation is defeated by deceit. Cowel.

3. [In horſemanſhip.] A horſe is ſaid to abate or take down his curvets; when working upon curvets, he puts his two hind legs to the ground both at once, and obſerves the ſame exactneſs in all the times. Dict.

ABA'TEMENT. n. ſ. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or leſſening.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thouſand houſes, and allowing one man to every houſe, house, who could have any share in the government (the rest consisting of women, children, and servants), and making other obvious abatements, these tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective.

Swift on the Contest of Athens and Rome.

2. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exhales in roasting, to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

The law of works is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every tittle. Locke.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation.

As our advantages towards practising and promoting piety and virtue were greater than those of other men; so will our excuse be less, if we neglect to make use of them. We cannot plead in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepossession of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. [In law.] The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or passion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ. Cowel.

6. [With heralds.] An accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abased, by reason of some stain or dishonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

ABA'TER. n. s. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured; that by which any thing is lessened.

Juices of acrimony or sharpness, are expressed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of such, as of almonds, pistaches, and other nuts. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABA'TOR. n. s. [a law term.] One who intrudes into houses or land, void by the death of the former possessor, and yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

A'BATUDE. n. s. [old records.] Any thing diminished. Bailey.

A'BATURE. n. s. [from abatre, French.] Those sprigs of grass which are thrown down by a stag in his passing by. Dict.

ABE. n. s. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

ABBA. n. s. [Heb. אב] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

A'BBACY. n. s. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Selmu, an abbacy is the dignity itself, since an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a secular person, who has the care of souls, is sometimes, in the canon law, also stiled an abbot. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'BBESS. n. s. [Lat. abbatissa, from whence the Saxon abudyrre, then probably abbatess, and by contraction abbesse in Fr. and abbesi, Eng.] The superiour or governess of a nunnery or monastery of women.

They fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them;
And here the abbess shuts the gate on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out.
Shakes. Com. of Errors.

I have a sister, abbess in Tercera,
Who lost her lover on her bridal-day.
Dryd. D. Sebast.

Constantia, as soon as the solemnities of her reception were over, retired with the abbess into her own apartment. Addison.

A'BBEY, or ABBY. n. s. [Lat. abbatia; from whence probably first ABBACY; which see.] A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women; distinguished from religious houses of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With easy roads he came to Leicester;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.
Shakesp.

A'BBEY-LUBBER. n. s. [See LUBBER.] A slothful loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of retirement and austerity.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive sucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'BBOT. n. s. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב father, which sense was still implied; so that the abbots were called patres, and abbesses matres monasterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowship of canons. Of these, some in England were mitred, some not: those that were mitred, were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, having in themselves episcopal authority within their precincts, and being also lords of parliament. The other sort were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. Cowel.

See ABBEY.

A'BBOTSHIP. n. s. The state or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBRE'VIATE. v. a. [Lat. abbreviare.]

1. To shorten by contraction of parts without loss of the main substance; to abridge.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon, Essay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath contributed towards politeness in discourse, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many syllables into one, by lopping off the rest. Swift.

2. To shorten, to cut short.

Set the strength of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and contracted into hundreds and threescores.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

ABBREVIA'TION. n. s.

1. The act of abbreviating.

2. The means used to abbreviate, as characters signifying whole words; words contracted.

Such is the propriety and energy in them all, that they never can be changed, but to disadvantage, except in the circumstance of using abbreviations. Swift.

ABBREVIA'TOR. n. s. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBRE'VIATURE. n. s. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark used for the sake of shortening.

2. A compendium or abridgment.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own suffering; who prays for him that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who sooner shews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to subdue the flesh to the spirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a Christian. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREUVOIR. [in French, a watering-place. Ital. abbeverato, dal verbo bevere. Lat. bibere. Abbeverari i cavalli. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adbibare for adbibere; but more probably it comes from the same root with brew. See BREW.] Among masons, the joint or juncture of two stones, or the interstice between two stones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A'BBEY. See ABBEY.

A, B, C.

1. The alphabet; as, he has not learned his a, b, c.

2. The little book by which the elements of reading are taught.

Then comes question like an a, b, c, book.
Shakespeare.

To A'BDICATE. v. a. [Lat. abdico.] To give up right; to resign; to lay down an office.

Old Saturn, here, with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

ABDICA'TION. n. s. [abdicatio, Lat.] The act of abdicating; resignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the usual or stated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other sort of vacancy in the throne, than would be caused by his death; since he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwise than by his own consent in form to a bill from the two houses.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England Man.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. That which causes or implies an abdication. Dict.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. [from abdo, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding. Dict.

ABDO'MEN. n. s. [Lat. from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: it contains the stomach, guts, liver, spleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago ensiformis and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebræ of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes, and os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, from whose alternate relaxations and contractions in respiration, digestion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for secretion and expulsion. Quincy.

The abdomen consists of parts containing and contained. Wiseman's Surgery.

ABDO'MINAL. } adj. Relating to the ab-
ABDO'MINOUS. } domen.

To ABDU'CE. v. a. [Lat. abduco.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another. A word chiefly used in physic or science.

If we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that position, the axis of the cones remain in the same plain, as is demonstrated in the optics delivered by Galen.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muscles abducent are those which serve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their opposites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDUCTION. n. f. [abductio, Lat.]
1. The act of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.
2. A particular form of argument.

ABDU'CTOR. n. f. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomists to the muscles, which serve to draw back the several members.

He supposed the constructors of the eye-lids must be strengthened in the supercilium; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the same steady and grave motion of the eye.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

ABECEDA'RIAN. n. f. [from the names of a, b, c, the three first letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienses, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in some part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A'BECEDARY. adj. [See ABECEDARIAN.]
1. Belonging to the alphabet.
2. Inscribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the sympathy of two needles touched with the loadstone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, described round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at, and bed.] In bed.

It was a shame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: when she was of their age, she would have made a handkerchief by that time o'day.
Sidney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd. Dryd. Span. Friar.

ABE'RRANCE. } n. f. [from aberro, Lat.
ABE'RRANCY. } to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an errour; a mistake; a false opinion.

They do not only swarm with errours, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deserts his reason, or complies with their aberrancies.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Could a man be compelled to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the cards of his understanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrancies, as now.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. 16.

ABE'RRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

ABERRA'TION. n. f. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common or from the right track.

If it be a mistake, there is no heresy in such an innocent aberration; the probability of it will render it a lapse of easy pardon.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica, c. 11.

ABE'RRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going astray.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

Divers were out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

To ABERU'NCATE. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To ABE'T. v. a. [from betan, Sax. signifying to enkindle or animate.] To push forward another, to support him in his designs by connivance, encouragement, or help. It was once indifferent, but is almost always taken by modern writers in an ill sense: as may be seen in ABETTER.

To abet signifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or set on. Cowel.

Then shall I soon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cause discontented,
And shortly back return. Fairy Queen, b. i.

A widow who by solemn vows,
Contracted to me, for my spouse,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay so great weight upon right opinions, and eagerness of abetting them, that they account that the unum necessarium. Decay of Piety.

They abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furnished supplies to the weaker side, lest there should be an end put to these fatal divisions.
Addison. Freeholder, No 28.

ABE'TMENT. n. f. The act of abetting. Dict.

ABE'TTER, or ABE'TTOR. n. f. He that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

Whilst calumny has two such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

You shall be still plain Torrismond with me,
Th' abettor, partner (if you like the name),
The husband of a tyrant, but no king,
Till you deserve that title by your justice.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

These considerations, though they may have no influence on the multitude, ought to sink into the minds of those who are their abetters, and who, if they escape punishment here, must know, that these several mischiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addison. Freeholder, No 50.

ABEY'ANCE. n. f. [from the French abeyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Discontinuance, is thus used. The right of fee-simple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment, and consideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parsonage, is in no man during the time that the parsonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowel.

ABGREGA'TION. n. f. [abgregatio, Lat.] A separation from the flock. Dict.

To ABHO'R. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to detest to extremity; to loath: to abominate.

Whilst I was big in clamour, came a man,
Who having seen me in my worser state,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society.
Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Justly thou abhorr'st
That son, who on the quiet state of men
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue
Rational liberty.
Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xii. l. 79.

The self-same thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for.
Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to fling scandals upon the clergy in general; which, besides the disgrace to the reformation, and to religion itself, casts an ignominy upon the kingdom. Swift. Ch. of Eng.

ABHO'RRENCE. } n. f. [from abhor.
ABHO'RRENCY. }
1. The act of abhorring, detestation.

It draws upon him the hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and subjects him to the wrath of God hereafter. South's Sermons.

2. The disposition to abhor, hatred.

Even a just and necessary defence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off somewhat from the abhorrence of it, and insensibly dispose them to hostilities. Decay of Piety.

The first tendency to any injustice that appears, must be suppressed with a show of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours.
Locke on Education, § 110.

ABHO'RRENT. adj. [from abhor.]
1. Struck with abhorrence; loathing.

For if the worlds
In worlds inclos'd could on his senses burst,
He would abhorrent turn.
Thomson's Summer, l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign, inconsistent with. It is used with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypothesis, well worthy a rational belief, and yet it is so abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as soon believe Anaxagoras, that snow is black, as him that should affirm it is not white.
Glanville's Scepsis Scient. c. 12.

Why then these foreign thoughts of state employments,
Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?
Poor mooning tenants of unpractis'd cells,
Bred in the fellowship of bearded boys,
What wonder is it if you know not men?
Dryden.

ABHO'RRER. n. f. [from abhor.] The person that abhors; a hater, detester.

The lower clergy were railed at, for disputing the power of the bishops, by the known abhorrers of episcopacy, and abused for doing nothing in the convocations, by these very men who wanted to bind up their hands. Swift. Examiner, N° 21.

ABHO'RRING. The object of abhorrence.

This seems not to be the proper use of the participial noun.

They shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against Me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh. Isaiah, lxvi. 44.

To ABI'DE. v. n. I abode or abid. [from bidian, or aubidian, Sax.]
1. To dwell in a place; not remove; to stay.

Thy servant became surety for the lad unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Gen. xliv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Those who apply themselves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the highest heavens, from whence He beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth.
Stillingfl. Defence of Disc. on Idolat.

3. To

3. To remain; not ceaſe or fail; to be immoveable.

They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Pſalm cxxv. 1.

4. To continue in the ſame ſtate.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied. Prov. xix. 23.

There can be no ſtudy without time; and the mind muſt abide and dwell upon things, or be always a ſtranger to the inſide of them. South.

5. To endure without offence, anger, or contradiction.

Who can abide, that, againſt their own doctors, ſix whole books ſhould by their fatherhoods be impiouſly obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

6. It is uſed with the particle with before a perſon, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I ſhould give her to another man: Abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19

For thy ſervant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, if the Lord ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

7. It is uſed with by before a thing; as, to abide by his teſtimony; to abide by his own ſkill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion; to maintain it; to abide by a man, is alſo, to defend or ſupport him. But theſe forms are ſomething low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward, and ſhould rather determine that abide in the active ſenſe has no paſſive participle, or compounded preterite.

To ABI'DE. v. a.

1. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await: uſed of things prepared for perſons, as well as of perſons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in ſumptuous bed, Where many ſkilful leeches him abide, To ſtanch his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. c. 5. ſt. 17.

Whil lions war, and battle for their dens, Poor harmleſs lambs abide their enmity. Shakeſp. Hen. VI. p. 3

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts, xx. 23.

2. To bear or ſupport the conſequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know How dearly I abide that boaſt ſo vain. Milton's Par. Loſt.

3. To bear or ſupport, without being conquered or deſtroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlaſting king: At his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It muſt be allowed a fair preſumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous teſt now for above thirty years, and the more ſtrictly they are looked into, the more they are confirmed. Woodward, Letter i.

4. To bear without averſion; in which ſenſe it is commonly uſed with a negative.

Thou canſt not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyſelf. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race.
Though thou didſt learn, had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waſt thou
Deſervedly confin'd unto this rock. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

5. To bear or ſuffer.

Girt with circumfluous tides,
He ſtill calamitous conſtraint abides. Pope's Odyſſ. b. iv. l. 730.

ABI'DER. n. ſ. [from abide.] The perſon that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in uſe.

ABI'DING. n. ſ. [from abide.] Continuance; ſtay; fixed ſtate.

We are ſtrangers before Thee and ſojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a ſhadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is ſo violently removed, and carried about with ſuch ſwiftneſs, as nothing in that place can conſiſt or have abiding. Rawleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

A'BJECT. adj. [abjectus, Lat. thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean; worthleſs; baſe; groveling: ſpoken of perſons, or their qualities.

Rebellion
Came like itſelf in baſe and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

I was at firſt, as other beaſts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milt. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 571.

Honeſt men, who tell their ſovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they ſhall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with baſe and abject flatterers. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

2. Being of no hope or regard; uſed of condition.

The rarer thy example ſtands,
By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,
Strongeſt of mortal men,
To loweſt pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n. Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

We ſee man and woman in the higheſt innocence and perfection, and in the moſt abject ſtate of guilt and infirmity. Addiſon. Spectator, N° 279.

3. Mean and deſpicable; uſed of actions.

The rapine is ſo abject and profane,
They not from trifles, nor from gods refrain. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8

To what baſe ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through ſacred luſt of praiſe? Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

A'BJECT. n. ſ. A man without hope; a man whoſe miſeries are irretrievable; one of the loweſt condition.

Yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me. Pſalm xxxv. 15.

To ABJE'CT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely uſed.

ABJE'CTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſtate of an abject.

Our Saviour would love at no leſs rate than death; and, from the ſupereminent height of glory, ſtooped and abaſed himſelf to the ſufferance of the extremeſt of indignities, and ſunk himſelf to the bottom of abjectedneſs, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJE'CTION. n. ſ. [from abject.] Meanneſs of mind; want of ſpirit; ſervility; baſeneſs.

That this ſhould be termed baſeneſs, abjection of mind, or ſervility, is it credible? Hooker, b. v. § 47.

The juſt medium lies betwixt pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Eſtrange.

A'BJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, baſely, ſervilely, contemptibly.

A'BJECTNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] Abjection, ſervility, meanneſs.

Servility and abjectneſs of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjectneſs of a baſe mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourſelves upon any account. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 7.

ABI'LITY. n. ſ. [Habileté, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon ſkill, or riches, or ſtrength, or any other quality.

Of ſinging thou haſt got the reputation,
Good Thyrſis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth ſeek another eſtimation. Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may ſerve
To lighten what thou ſuffer'ſt, and appeaſe
Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r, Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treaſure. Ezra, ii. 69.

If any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he aſſures us of the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Capacity of mind; force of underſtanding; mental power.

Children in whom there was no blemiſh, but well-favoured, and ſkilful in all wiſdom, and cunning in knowledge, and underſtanding ſcience, and ſuch as had ability in them to ſtand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

2. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently ſignifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and ſometimes the force of underſtanding given by nature, as diſtinguiſhed from acquired qualifications.

Whether it may be thought neceſſary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call pariſhes, there ſhould be one man, at leaſt, of abilities to read and write? Swift.

ABINTE'STATE. adj. [of ab, from, and inteſtatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To A'BJUGATE. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to uncouple. Dict.

To ABJU'RE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To caſt off upon oath, to ſwear not to do or not to have ſomething.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the ſociety of man. Shakeſpeare's Midſum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reaſon, and ſworn allegiance to a preconceived fantaſtical hypotheſis can undertake the defence of ſuch a ſuppoſition. Hale.

2. To retract, recant, or abnegate a poſition upon oath.

ABJURA'TION. n. ſ. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church, or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the uſual trial of law, but confeſſing his fault to the juſtice, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forſake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are ſome abjurations ſtill in force among us here in England; as, by the ſtatute of the 25th of king Charles II. all perſons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, muſt take the teſt; which is an abjuration of ſome doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewiſe another oath of abjuration, which which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is to abjure the Pretender.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To ABLA'CTATE. v. a. [ablacto, Lat.] To wean from the breaſt.

ABLACTA'TION. n. ſ. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the ſignification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother ſtock; not cutting it off wholly from the ſtock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEA'TION. n. ſ. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The art or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Sir W. Rawleigh's Eſſays.

2. Into a ſhip.

When morning roſe, I ſent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neighb'ring ſpring,
Whilſt I the motions of the winds explor'd;
Then ſummon'd in my crew, and went aboard.
Addiſon's Ovid's Metamorphoſes, b. iii.

ABO'DE. n. ſ. [from abide.]

1. Habitation, dwelling, place of reſidence.

But I know thy abode and thy going out, and thy coming in. 2 Kings, xix. 27.

Others may uſe the ocean as their road,
Only the Engliſh make it their abode;
Whoſe ready ſails with every wind can fly,
And make a cov'nant with th' inconſtant ſky.
Waller.

2. Stay, continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.
Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

Making a ſhort abode in Sicily the ſecond time, landing in Italy, and making the war, may be reaſonably judged the buſineſs but of ten months.
Dryden's Dedication to Æneid.

The woodcocks early viſit, and abode
Of long continuance in our temp'rate clime,
Foretel a liberal harveſt. Phillips.

3. To make abode. To dwell, to reſide, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode,
Thence full of fate returns, and of the God.
Dryd. Æn. b.

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreſhow; to be a prognoſtic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the ſenſe either of good or ill.

Every man,
After the hideous ſtorm that follow'd, was
A thing inſpir'd; and, not conſulting, broke
Into a general prophecy, that this tempeſt,
Daſhing the garment of this peace, abodes
The ſudden breach of it. Shakſp. Henry VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. ſ. [from To abode.] A ſecret anticipation of ſomething future; an impreſſion upon the mind of ſome event to come; prognoſtication; omen.

I like not this.
For many men that ſtumble at the threſhold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.—
—Tuſh! man, abodements muſt not now affright us.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

My lord biſhop aſked him, Whether he had never any ſecret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke; but I think ſome adventure may kill me as well as another man. Wotton.

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [aboleo, Latin.]

1. To annul; to make void. Applied to laws or inſtitutions.

For us to aboliſh what he hath eſtabliſhed, were preſumption moſt intolerable. Hooker, l. iii. § 10.

On the parliament's part it was propoſed, that all the biſhops, deans, and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and aboliſhed.
Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to, to deſtroy.

The long continued wars between the Engliſh and the Scots, had then raiſed invincible jealouſies and hate, which long continued peace hath ſince aboliſhed. Sir John Hayward.

That ſhall Pericles well requite, I wot,
And, with thy blood, aboliſh ſo reproachful blot.
Fairy Queen.

More deſtroy'd than they,
We ſhould be quite aboliſh'd, and expire.
Milton.

Or wilt thou thyself
Abolish thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?
Milton, b. iii. l. 163.

Nor could Vulcanian flame
The stench abolish, or the savour tame.
Dryd. Virg. Geo. iii.

Fermented spirits contract, harden, and consolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; especially where the fibres are the tenderest, as in the brain. Arbuth. on Aliments.

ABO'LISHABLE. adj. [from abolish.] That which may be abolished.

ABO'LISHER. n. s. [from abolish.] He that abolishes.

ABO'LISHMENT. n. s. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing.

The plain and direct way had been to prove, that all such ceremonies, as they require to be abolished, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with less benefit than the abolishment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.

He should think the abolishment of episcopacy among us, would prove a mighty scandal and corruption to our faith, and manifestly dangerous to our monarchy. Swift's Church of England Man.

ABOLI'TION. n. s. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing. This is now more frequently used than abolishment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, proposed by Agrippa, been accepted instead of Mæcenas's model, that state might have continued unto this day. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

An apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABO'MINABLE. adj. [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, detestable; to be loathed.

The infernal pit
Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe.
Milton.

Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

2. Unclean.

The soul that shall touch any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of loose and indeterminate censure.

They say you are a melancholy fellow.—I am so; I do love it better than laughing.—Those that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards.
Shakespeare's As[illegible]

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. s. [from abominable] The quality of being abominable; hatefulness, odiousness.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and essential difference between virtue and vice, we must forbear to urge arbitrary, with the corruption and abominableness of their principles.
Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, signifying excessively, extremely, exceedingly; in an ill sense. It is not often seriously used.

I have observed great abuse and disorders in your family; your servants are mutinous and quarrelsome, and cheat you most abominably.
Arbuthnot.

To ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor, detest, hate utterly

Pride goes, hated, cursed, and abominated by all. Hammond.

We are not guilty of your injuries,
No way consent to them; but do abhor,
Abominate, and loath this cruelty.
Southern's Oroonoko.

He professed both to abominate and despise all mystery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or minister. Swift.

ABOMINA'TION. n. s.

1. Hatred, detestation.

To assist king Charles by English or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new subjects, who have nothing in so great abomination, as those whom they hold for heretics. Swift.

2. The object of hatred.

Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Genesis, xlvi. 34.

His wife miscarried, but, as the abortion proved only a female fœtus, he comforted himself.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus blasted, dry and wither'd,
Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,
Like some untimely product of the seasons.
Rowe.

ABO'RTIVE. n. s. That which is born before the due time. Perhaps anciently any thing irregularly produced.

No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its natural causes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.
Shakesp. King John.

Take the fine skin of an abortive, and, with starch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet.
Peacham on Drawing.

Many are preserved, and do signal service to their country, who, without a provision, might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought upon their guilty parents the like destruction.
Addison. Guardian. N° 106.

ABO'RTIVE. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light.
Shakesp. Richard III.

All th' unaccomplish'd works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Dissolv'd on earth, fleet hither.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. 56

Nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride
When other orchards smile, abortive fail.
Phillips.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride.
Shakesp. Henry VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

The void profound
Of unessential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping; and with utter loss of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 451.

4. That which fails or miscarries, from whatever cause. This is less proper.

Many politic conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive.
South's Sermons.

ABO'RTIVELY. adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely, untimely.

ABO'RTIVENESS. n. s. [from abortive.] The state of abortion.

ABO'RTMENT. n. s. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

Concealed treasures, now lost to mankind, shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose wretched carcases the impartial laws dedicate, as untimely feasts, to the worms of the earth, in whose womb those deserted mineral riches must ever lie buried as lost abortments, unless those be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Physical Remains.

ABO'VE. prep. [from a, and bufan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. To a higher place; in a higher place.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;

Her lovely knight.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. ii. ſtanz. 33.

A wolf that was paſt labour, in his old age, [illegible] a habit, and ſo about he goes, begging from door to door, under the diſguiſe of a [illegible]. L'Eſtrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to die, upon the point, within a ſmall diſtance of.

Theſe dying lovers, and their floating ſons,
Suſpend the fight, and ſilence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to periſh, finds
Such noble pity in brave Engliſh minds. Waller.

6. Round; the longeſt way, in oppoſition to the ſhort ſtraight way.

Gold had theſe natures; greatneſs of weight; cloſeneſs of parts; fixation; pliantneſs, or ſoftneſs; immunity from ruſt; colour, or tincture of yellow: Therefore the ſure way (though moſt about) to make gold, is to know the cauſes of the ſeveral natures before rehearſed.
Bacon's Natural Hiſt. N° 328.

Spies of the Volſcians
Held me in chace, that I was forced to wheel

Three

Three or four miles about; else had I, Sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or ſtate deſired; as, he has brought about his purpoſes.
Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much queſtion. Spectator.

8. To come about; to come to ſome certain ſtate or point. It has commonly the idea of revolution, or gyration.
Wherefore it came to paſs, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that ſhe bare a ſon. 1 Sam. i. 20.
One evening it befel, that looking out,
The wind they long had wiſh'd was come about;
Well pleas'd they went to reſt; and if the gale
Till morn continu'd, both reſolv'd to ſail.
Dryd. Fables.

9. To go about; to prepare to do it.
Did not Moſes give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? John, vii. 19.
In common language, they ſay, to come about a man, to circumvent him.
Some of theſe phraſes ſeem to derive their original from the French à bout; venir à bout d'une choſe; venir à bout de quelqu'un.

To ABRI'DGE. v. a. [abréger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]
1. To make ſhorter in words, keeping ſtill the ſame ſubſtance.
All theſe ſayings, being declared by Jaſon of Cyrene in five books, we will eſſay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.
2. To contract, to diminiſh, to cut ſhort.
The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as ſuch determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty conſiſts. Locke.
3. To deprive of; to cut off from. In which ſenſe it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.
I have diſabled mine eſtate,
By ſhewing ſomething a more ſwelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From ſuch a noble rate.
Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.
They were formerly, by the common law, diſcharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them ſince by ſeveral ſtatutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici

ABRI'DGMENT. n. ſ. [abregement, French.]
1. The epitome of a larger work contracted into a ſmall compaſs; a compend; a ſummary.
Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of ſcripture.
Hooker, b. ii. § 5
Idolatry is certainly the firſt-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and ſum total of all abſurdities.
South's Sermons.
2. A diminution in general.
All rhyme, by a love of littleneſs,
To make abridgments, and to draw to leſs,
Even that nothing, which at firſt we were.
Donne.
3. Contraction; reduction.
The conſtant deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us, no body, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at leaſt an abridgment of liberty to be complained of. Locke.
4. Reſtraint from any thing pleaſing; contraction of any thing enjoyed.
It is not barely a man's abridgment in his external accommodations which makes him miſerable, but when his conſcience ſhall tell him that it was his ſin and his folly which brought him under that abridgment. South.

ABRO'ACH. adv. [See To BROACH.]
1. In a poſture to run out, or yield the liquor contained; properly ſpoken of veſſels.
The jars of gen'rous wine

Stays till 'tis fair, yet ſeems to call a coach.
Swift's Miſcel.
2. In a figurative ſenſe; in a ſtate to be diffuſed or extended, in a ſtate of ſuch beginning as promiſes a progreſs.
That man, that ſits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the ſunſhine of his favour,
Would he abuſe the countenance of the king,
Alack! what miſchiefs might be ſet abroach,
In ſhadow of ſuch greatneſs!
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABRO'AD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]
1. Without confinement; widely; at large.
Intermit no watch
Againſt a wakeful foe, while I abroad,
Thro' all the coaſts of dark deſtruction ſeek
Deliverance. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 463.
Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On ſecret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverſes the lawn,
And ſhuns the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.
2. Out of the houſe.
Welcome, Sir,
This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,
And ſubjects none abroad. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.
Lady —— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it. Pope's Letters.
3. In another country.
They thought it better to be ſomewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and diſcredited. Hooker, Pref.
Whoſoever offers at verbal tranſlation, ſhall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who loſt his own language abroad, and brought home no other inſtead of it. Sir J. Denham.
What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land?
Dryd. Span. Friar.
He who ſojourns in a foreign country, refers what he ſees and hears abroad, to the ſtate of things at home. Atterb. Serm.
4. In all directions, this way and that; with wide expanſion.
Full in the midſt of this infernal road,
An elm diſplays her duſky arms abroad.
Dryd. Virg. Æn. vi.
5. Without, not within.
Bodies politic, being ſubject, as much as natural, to diſſolution, by divers means, theſe are undoubtedly more ſtates overthrown through diſeaſes bred within themſelves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker, Dedication.

To A'BROGATE. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force; to repeal; to annul.
Laws have been made upon ſpecial occaſions, which occaſions ceaſing, laws of that kind do abrogate themſelves. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.
The negative precepts of men may ceaſe by many inſtruments, by contrary cuſtoms, by public diſuſe, by long omiſſion, but the negative precepts of God never can ceaſe, but when they are expreſsly abrogated by the ſame authority.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ABRO'GATION. n. ſ. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating; the repeal of a law.
The commiſſioners from the confederate Roman catholics, demanded the abrogation and repeal of all thoſe laws, which were in force againſt the exerciſe of the Roman religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

To ABRO'OK. v. a. [from To brook, with a ſuperabundant, a word not in uſe.] To brook, to bear, to endure.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people gazing on thy face
With envious looks, ſtill laughing at thy ſhame.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

ABRU'PT. adj. [abruptus, Lat. broken off.]
1. Broken, craggy.
Reſiſtleſs, roaring, dreadful, down it comes
From the rude mountain, and the mighty wood,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt. Howe, Writer.
2. Divided, without any thing intervening.
Or ſpread his airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vaſt abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy iſle.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 640.
3. Sudden, without the cuſtomary or proper preparatives.
My lady craves
To know the cauſe of your abrupt departure.
Shakeſpeare.
The abrupt and unkind breaking off the two firſt parliaments, was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham. Clarendon.
Abrupt, with eagle-ſpeed ſhe cut the ſky;
Inſtant inviſible to mortal eye.
Then firſt he recogniz'd th' ethereal gueſt.
Pope's Odyſſ. b. i.
4. Unconnected.
The abrupt ſtile, which hath many breaches, and doth not ſeem to end but fall.
Ben Jonſon's Diſcovery.

ABRU'PTED. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in use.] Broken off suddenly.

The effects of their activity are not precipitously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. 10.

ABRU'PTION. n. f. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and sudden separation.

Those which are inclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter, being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them, have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all their sides.

Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. 4.

ABRU'PTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily, without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Musidorus. Sidney, b. ii.

Now missing from their joy so lately found,
So lately found, and so abruptly gone.

Par. Regained, b. ii.

They both of them punctually observed the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or business they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as soon as the clock warned them to retire. Addison, Spectator, N° 241.

ABRU'PTNESS. n. f. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner, haste, suddenness, untimely vehemence.
2. The state of an abrupt or broken thing; roughness, craggines; as of a fragment violently disjoined.

The crystallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptness, at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the stone, or sides of the intervals; which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the said stone.

Woodw. Nat. Hist. p. 4.

A'BSCESS. n. f. [abscessus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies in eight days, the inflammation ends in a suppuration and an abscess in the lungs, and sometimes in some other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.

Lindanus conjectured it might be some hidden abscess in the mesentery, which, breaking some few days after, was discovered to be an apostem of the mesentery. Harvey on Consumptions.

To ABSCI'ND. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative sense.

ABSCISSA. [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic section, intercepted between the vertex and a semi-ordinate.

ABSCI'SSION. n. f. [abscissio, Lat.]

1. The act of cutting off.

Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abscission of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may understand this intercision, not abscission, or consummate desolation.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

To ABSCO'ND. v. n. [abscondo, Lat.] To hide one's self; to retire from the public view: generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

The marmotte or mus alpinus, which absconds all winter, lives on its own fat: for in autumn, when it shuts itself up in its hole, it is very fat; but in the spring-time, when it comes forth again, very lean. Ray on the Creation.

ABSCO'NDER. n. f. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

A'BSENCE. n. f. [See ABSENT.]

1. The state of being absent, opposed to presence.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party to defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: all's in danger.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind.

Dryd. Fab.

You have given no dissertation upon the absence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they should support themselves under those separations. Addison, Spectator, N° 241.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal sense.

Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in banished persons; this is entirely necessary. A second, necessary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the service of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable absence; as, that of students on the score of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandise, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed cum dolo & culpâ, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contumacious person, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is, by the law, in some respects, reputed as a person present. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

3. Inattention, heedlessness, neglect of the present object.

I continued my walk, reflecting on the little absences and distractions of mankind.

Addison, Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is used with the particle from.

His absence from his mother oft he'll mourn,
And, with his eyes, look wishes to return.

Dryd. Juv. Sat. ii.

A'BSENT. adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present: used with the particle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At morn the plains, at noon the shady grove;
But Delia always: absent from her sight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight.

Pope's Past.

Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike. Wisd. xi. 11.

2. Absent in mind, inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent, because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent, because he thinks of nothing.

Addison, Spectator, N° 77.

To ABSE'NT. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into presence.

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity a while,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Go—for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.

Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix. l. 372.

Tho' I am forc'd thus to absent myself
From all I love, I shall contrive some means,
Some friendly interval, to visit thee.

Southern's Spartan Dame.

The Arengo is still called together in cases of importance; and if, after due summons, any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to absence; absent. Dict.

ABSENTE'E. n. f. He that is absent from his station or employment, or country. A word used commonly with regard to Irishmen living out of their country.

Then was the first statute made against absentees, commanding all such as had land in Ireland, to return and reside thereupon.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of estates in Ireland are owned by absentees, and such as draw over the profits raised out of Ireland, refunding nothing.

Child's Discourse on Trade.

ABSI'NTHIATED. part. [from absinthium, Lat. wormwood.] Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

To ABSI'ST. v. n. [absisto, Lat.] To stand off, to leave off. Dict.

To ABSO'LVE. v. a. [absolvo, Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime in a judicial sense.

Your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Our victors, blest in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy past dangers, and absolve the stars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth, to be here absolved; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general scandal, of redeeming the credit lost by former judgments. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To set free from an engagement or promise.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,
And the act all, I am absolv'd by both.

Waller's Maid's Tragedy.

This command, which must necessarily comprehend the persons of our natural fathers, must mean a duty we owe them, distinct from our obedience to the magistrate, and from which the most absolute power of princes cannot absolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm in this eternal sleep;
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;
Ev'n superstition loses ev'ry fear;
For God, not man, absolves our frailties here.

Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

4. To finish, to complete. This use is not common.

What cause
Mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest
Through all eternity, so late to build
In chaos; and the work begun, how soon
Absolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii. l. 94.

If that which is so supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely, then that one circulation which preceded it, must necessarily be like ours, and consequently absolved in the space of twenty-four hours. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

A'BSOLUTE. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to persons as things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be but that the words of his mouth are absolute, and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker, b. ii. § 6.

What is his strength by land?—
—Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. Unconditional; as, an absolute promise.

Although it runs in forms absolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the person to whom it is pronounced.

South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, absolute space.

I see still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will bear any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God, as well at least as it doth in the worship of images.

Stilling fl. Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

An absolute mode is that which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever;

fever; but a relative mode is derived from the regard that one being has to others.
Watts's Logick.

In this ſenſe we ſpeak of the ablative caſe abſolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, abſolute power.
My crown is abſolute, and holds of none;
I cannot in a baſe ſubjection live,
Nor ſuffer you to take, tho' I would give.
Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Poſitive; certain; without any heſitation. In this ſenſe it rarely occurs.
Long is it ſince I ſaw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd thoſe lines of favour,
Which then he wore; the ſnatches in his voice,
And burſt of ſpeaking, were as his: I'm abſolute,
'Twas very Cloten. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline

A'BSOLUTELY. adv. [from abſolute.]

1. Completely, without reſtriction.
All the contradictions which grow in thoſe minds, that neither abſolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely ſink into the ſea of vanity.
Sidney.
What merit they can build upon having joined with a proteſtant army, under a king they acknowledge, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, abſolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be ſo for ever.
Swift's Preſb. Plea.

2. Without relation; in a ſtate unconnected.
Abſolutely we cannot diſcommend, we cannot abſolutely approve either willingneſs to live, or forwardneſs to die. Hooker, b. v.
Theſe then being the perpetual cauſes of zeal; the greateſt good, or the greateſt evil; either abſolutely ſo in themſelves, or relatively ſo to us; it is therefore good to be zealouſly affected for the one againſt the other. Sprat's Sermons.
No ſenſible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and ſound, can be ſubſiſtent in the bodies themſelves, abſolutely conſidered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of ſenſe. Theſe qualities are only the effects of our ſenſation, which ariſe from the different motions upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and poſitions.
Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependance.
The prince long time had courted fortune's love,
But, once poſſeſs'd, did abſolutely reign:
Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes ſtrove,
And conquer'd firſt thoſe beauties they would gain.
Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.
And of that nature, for the moſt part, are things abſolutely unto all men's ſalvation neceſſary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily; poſitively.
Being as I am, why didſt not thou
Command me abſolutely not to go,
Going into ſuch danger, as thou ſaidſt?
Parad. Loſt, b. ix.

A'BSOLUTENESS. n. ſ. [from abſolute.]

1. Completeneſs.

2. Freedom from dependance, or limits.
The abſoluteneſs and illimitedneſs of his commiſſion was generally much ſpoken of.
Clarendon, b. viii.
There is nothing that can raiſe a man to that generous abſoluteneſs of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happineſs within himſelf, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

3. Deſpoticiſm.
He kept a ſtrait hand on his nobility, and choſe rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obſequious to him, but had leſs intereſt in the people; which made for his abſoluteneſs, but not for his ſafety. Bacon's Henry VII
They dreſs up power with all the ſplendor and temptation abſoluteneſs can add to it. Locke.

ABSOLU'TION. n. ſ. [abſolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.
Abſolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a perſon by ſome final ſentence of law; alſo, a temporary diſcharge of him farther attendance upon a meine proceſs, though a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewiſe in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewiſe ſignifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of ſome ſentence pronounced either in a court of law, or elſe in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of abſolution, termed judicial, and another ſtyled a declaratory or extra-judicial abſolution.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. The remiſſion of ſins, or penance, declared by eccleſiaſtical authority.
The abſolution pronounced by a prieſt, whether papiſt or proteſtant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the perſon, ſo abſolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

A'BSOLUTORY. adj. [abſolutorius, Lat.] That which abſolves.
Though an abſolutory ſentence ſhould be pronounced in favour of the perſons, upon the account of nearneſs of blood; yet, if adultery ſhall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded againſt as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'BSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reaſon, wide from the purpoſe.

A'BSONOUS. adj. [abſonus, Lat. ill-ſounding.] Abſurd, contrary to reaſon. It is not much in uſe, and it may be doubted whether it ſhould be followed by to or from.
To ſuppoſe an uniter of a middle conſtitution, that ſhould partake of ſome of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties, yea, muſt abſonous to our reaſon.
Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica, c. 4.

To ABSO'RB. v. a. [abſorbeo, Lat. preter. abſorbed; part. pret. abſorbed, or abſorpt.]

1. To ſwallow up.
Moſes imputed the deluge to the diſruption of the abyſs; and St. Peter to the particular conſtitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be abſorpt in water. Burn. Theory.
Some tokens ſhew
Of fearleſs friendſhip, and their ſinking mates
Suſtain; vain love, tho' laudable, abſorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vaſt profundity. Phillips

2. To ſuck up. See ABSORBENT.
The evils that come of exerciſe are that it doth abſorb and attenuate the moiſture of the body.
Bacon.
Suppoſing the forementioned conſumption ſhould prove ſo durable, as to abſorb and attenuate the ſaid ſanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts muſt neceſſarily come into danger. Harvey on Conſumptions.
While we perſpire, we abſorb the moiſtned air.
Arbuthnot.

ABSO'RBENT. n. ſ. [abſorbens, Lat.]
A medicine that, by the ſoftneſs or poroſity of its parts, either caſes the aſperities of pungent humours, or dries away ſuperfluous moiſture in the body.
Quincy.
There is a third claſs of ſubſtances, commonly called abſorbents; as, the various kinds of ſhells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewiſe raiſe an effervescence with acids, and are therefore called alkalis, though not ſo properly, for they are not ſalts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABSO'RPT. part. [from abſorb.] Swallowed up; uſed as well, in a figurative ſenſe, of perſons, as, in the primitive, of things.
What can you expect from a man, who has not talked theſe five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the preſent world, its cuſtoms and its manners, to be fully poſſeſſed and abſorpt in the paſt. Pope's Letters.

ABSO'RPTION. n. ſ. [from abſorb.] The act of ſwallowing up.
It was below the dignity of thoſe ſacred penmen, or the Spirit of God that directed them, to ſhew us the cauſes of this diſruption, or of this abſorption; this is left to the enquiries of men.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTA'IN. v. n. [abſtineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's ſelf any gratification; with the particle from.
If thou judge it hard and difficult,
Converſing, looking, loving, to abſtain
From love's due rites, nuptial embraces ſweet;
And, with deſires, to languiſh without hope.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x. l. 993.
To be perpetually longing, and impatiently deſirous of any thing, ſo that a man cannot abſtain from it, is to loſe a man's liberty, and to become a ſervant of meat and drink, or ſmoke.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Even then the doubtful billows ſcarce abſtain
From the toſs'd veſſel on the troubled main.
Dryden's Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS. adj. [abſtemius, Lat.] Temperate, ſober, abſtinent, refraining from exceſs or pleaſures. It is uſed of perſons; as, an abſtemious hermit: and of things; as, an abſtemious diet. It is ſpoken likewiſe of things that cauſe temperance.
The inſtances of longevity are chiefly amongſt the abſtemious. Abſtinence in extremity will prove a mortal diſeaſe; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Clytorean ſtreams the love of wine expel,
(Such is the virtue of th' abſtemious well)
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
Extinguiſhes, and balks the drunken god:
Or that Melampus (ſo have ſome aſſur'd)
When the mad Prætides with charms he cur'd,
And pow'rful herbs, both charms and ſimples caſt
Into the ſober ſpring, where ſtill their virtues laſt.
Dryden's Fables.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY. adv. [from abſtemious.] Temperately, ſoberly, without indulgence.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abſtemious.

ABSTE'NTION. n. ſ. [from abſtineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or reſtraining; reſtraint. Dict.

To ABSTE'RGE. v. a. [abſtergo, Lat.] To cleanſe by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTE'RGENT. adj. Cleanſing; having a cleanſing quality.

To ABSTE'RSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanſe, to purify; a word very little in uſe, and leſs analogical than abſterge.
Nor will we affirm, that iron received, in the ſtomach of the oſtrich, no alteration; but we ſuſpect this effect rather from corroſion than digeſtion; not any tendence to chillification by the natural heat, but rather ſome attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the ſtomach, which may abſterſe and ſhave the ſcorious parts thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ABSTE'RSION. n. ſ. [abſterſio, Lat.] The act of cleanſing. See ABSTERGE.
Abſterſion is plainly a ſcouring off, or inciſion of the more viſcous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which ſcoureth linen cloth ſpeedily from the foulneſs.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE. adj. [from abſterge.] That has has the quality of abſterging or cleanſing.

It is good, after purging, to uſe apozemes and broths, not ſo much opening as thoſe uſed before purging; but abſtinſive and mundifying clyſters alſo are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours.

Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A tablet ſtood of that abſtinence tree,
Where Æthiops' ſwarthy bird did build to neſt.

Sir John Denham.

There, many a flow'r abſtinence grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miſc.

A'BSTINENCE. n. ſ. [abſtinentia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Becauſe the abſtinence from a preſent pleaſure, that offers itſelf, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that that operates after the ſame manner pain does, and teaches, in our thoughts, what is future; and to forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Faſting, or forbearance of neceſſary food. It is generally diſtinguiſhed from temperance, as the greater degree from the leſs; ſometimes as ſingle performances from habits; as, a day of abſtinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you faſt? your ſtomachs are too young.
And abſtinence engenders maladies.

Shakſpear's Love's Labour Loſt.

And the faces of them, which have uſed abſtinence, ſhall ſhine above the ſtars, whereas our faces ſhall be blacker than darkneſs.

2 Eſdras, vii. 55.

Religious men, who hither muſt be ſent
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, faſts, and abſtinence,
To puniſh bodies for the ſoul's offence.

Dryden's Indian Emp.

A'BSTINENCY. n. ſ. The ſame with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards for the abſtinencies, or riots, of this preſent life, under the prejudices of ſhort or finite, the promiſes and threats of Chriſt would loſe much of their virtue and energy.

Hammond's Fundam.

A'BSTINENT. adj. [abſtinens, Lat.] That uſes abſtinence, in oppoſition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

ABSTO'RTED. adj. [abſtortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT. v. a. [abſtrabo, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abſtract from their pernicious effects, and ſuppoſe this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praiſe. Decay of Piety.

2. To ſeparate by diſtillation.

Having depleginated ſpirit of wine, and gently abſtracted the whole ſpirit, there remaineth in the retort a ſyrptical ſubſtance. Boyle.

3. To ſeparate ideas.

Thoſe who cannot diſtinguiſh, compare, and abſtract, would hardly be able to underſtand and make uſe of language, or judge or reaſon to any tolerable degree. Locke.

4. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the diſcourſes we hear, or what we deſign to ſpeak, let us abſtract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

A'BSTRACT. adj. [abſtractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from ſomething elſe; generally uſed with relation to mental perceptions; as, abſtract mathematics, abſtract terms, in oppoſition to concrete

Mathematics, in its latitude, is uſually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abſtract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed, doth conſider the quantity of ſome particular determinate ſubject. So aſtronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, muſic of ſounds, and mechanics of weights and powers.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abſtract terms ſignify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the ſubject in which it is, as, whiteneſs, roundneſs, length, breadth, wiſdom, mortality, life, death.

Watts's Logick.

2. With the particle from.

Another uſe from the conſidering things in themſelves, abſtract from our opinions, and other men's notions and diſcourſes on them, will be, that each man will purſue his thoughts in that method, which will be moſt agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehenſion of what it ſuggeſts to him. Locke.

A'BSTRACT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A ſmaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You ſhall not find a man, who is the abſtract of all faults all men follow.

Shakſpear's Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are faſſe, theſe epithets are ſmall;
You're then the things, and abſtract of them all.

Dryden's Juv.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the ſentiments he had remarked, ſo that he could give a tolerable analyſis and abſtract of every treatiſe he had read, juſt after he had finiſhed it. Watts's Imp. of the Mind.

3. The ſtate of being abſtracted, or diſjoined.

The hearts of great princes, if they be conſidered, as it were in abſtract, without the neceſſity of ſtates, and circumſtances of time, can take no full and propitional pleaſure in the exerciſe of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRA'CTED. part. adj. [from abſtract.]

1. Separated; diſjoined.

That ſpace the evil one abſtracted ſtood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, purified.

Abſtracted fortitude love, they like
Their food exalted. Donne.

3. Abſtruſe; difficult.

4. Abſent of mind, inattentive to preſent objects; as, an abſtracted ſcholar.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY. adv. With abſtraction, ſimply, ſeparately from all contingent circumſtances.

Or whether more abſtractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book:
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unſkill'd in arts,
In ſeveral ages born, in ſeveral parts,
Weave ſuch agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conſpire to cheat us with a lie?
Unaſk'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.

Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION. n. ſ. [abſtractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abſtracting.

The word abſtraction ſignifies a withdrawing ſome part of an idea from other parts of it; by which means ſuch abſtracted ideas are formed, as neither repreſent any thing corporeal or ſpiritual, that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts's Logick.

2. The ſtate of being abſtracted.

3. Abſence of mind; inattention.

4. Diſregard of worldly objects.

A hermit wiſhes to be praiſed for his abſtraction.

Pope's Letters.

ABSTRA'CTIVE. adj. [from abſtract.] Having the power or quality of abſtracting.

ABSTRA'CTLY. adv. [from abſtract.] In an abſtract manner, abſolutely, without reference to any thing elſe.

Matter abſtractly and abſolutely conſidered, cannot have been an infinite duration now paſt and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRA'CTNESS. n. ſ. [from abſtract.] Subtilty; ſeparation from all matter or common notion.

I have taken ſome pains to make plain and familiar to your thoughts, truths, which eſtabliſhed prejudice, or the abſtractneſs of the ideas themſelves, might render difficult. Locke.

ABSTRI'CTED. part. adj. [abſtrictus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

To ABSTRI'NGE. v. a. To unbind. Dict.

To ABSTRU'DE. v. a. [abſtrudo, Lat.] To thruſt off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRU'SE. adj. [abſtruſus, Lat. thruſt out of ſight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whoſe ſight diſcerns
Abſtruſeſt thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, ſaw, without their light,
Rebellion riſing.

Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult; remote from conception or apprehenſion. It is oppoſed to obvious and eaſy.

So ſpake our Sire, and by his count'nance ſeem'd
Entering on ſtudious thoughts abſtruſe.

Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abſtruſe, and not eaſy to be diſtinguiſhed, eſpecially thoſe of the tongue, which is moved through the help of many muſcles, ſo cloſely, and habitually, and variouſly, that we are ſcarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures ſtrictly framed.

Holder.

No man could give a rule of the greateſt beauties, and the knowledge of them was to abſtruſe, that there was no manner of ſpeaking which could expreſs them. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abſtruſe manner; obſcurely, not plainly, or obviouſly.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.] The quality of being abſtruſe; difficulty, obſcurity.

It is not oftentimes ſo much what the ſcripture ſays, as what ſome men perſuade others it ſays, that makes it ſeem obſcure, and that as to ſome other paſſages that are ſo indeed, ſince it is the abſtruſeneſs of what is taught in them, that makes them almoſt inevitably ſo, it is little leſs fauſt, upon ſuch a ſcore, to find fault with the ſtyle of the ſcripture, than to do ſo with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.]

1. Abſtruſeneſs.

2. That which is abſtruſe. A word ſeldom uſed.

Authors are alſo ſuſpicious, nor greedily to be ſwallowed, who pretend to write of ſecrets, to deliver antipathies, ſympathies, and the occult abſtruſities of things. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ABSU'ME. v. a. [abſumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waſte; to eat up. An uncommon word.

That which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt, no not ſo much as any part of it, for if it had burned part after part, the whole muſt needs be abſumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSU'RD. adj. [abſurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreaſonable; without judgment, as uſed of men.

Seeming wise men may make shift to get opinion; but let no man chuse them for employment; for certainly you had better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over formal. Bacon.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one, who shews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison, Spectator, N° 291.

2. Inconsistent, contrary to reason, used of sentiments or practices.

The thing itself appeared desirable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and desire it; but then, it was after a very irrational absurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat,
'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave.
Pope's Essay on Man.

ABSU'RDITY. n. s. [from absurd].

1. The quality of being absurd; want of judgment, applied to men; want of propriety, applied to things.

However this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the absurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That which is absurd; as, his travels were full of absurdities. In which sense it has a plural.

That satisfaction we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see the infirmities of another, or when we reflect on any past calamities of our own. Addison.

ABSU'RDLY. adv. [from absurd.] After an absurd manner; improperly; unreasonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when the lordly lion, forbear,
With'obstinacy fixes there;
And where his genius most inclines,
Absurdly bends his whole designs. Swift's Miscel.

We may proceed yet further with the atheist, and convince him, that not only his principle is absurd, but his consequences also as absurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSU'RDNESS. n. s. [from absurd.] The quality of being absurd; injudiciousness; impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently used.

ABU'NDANCE. n. s. [abondance, Fr.]

1. Plenty; a sense chiefly poetical.

At the abundance of thy word,
Crown'd abundance spreads my board. Crashaw.

The double blessings his subjects have supplies, Who, in their bounty, to themselves are kind; So glad I give to see their Nemus rise, And, in the plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn is shut up between mountains, covered with woods of fir tree. Abundance of peasant are employed in hewing down the largest of these trees, that, after they are barked and cut into shape, are tumbled down. Addison on Italy.

3. A great quantity.

Their chief enterprise was the recovery of the Holy Land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been shed, with very small benefit unto the Christian state.
Sir Walter Raleigh's Essays.

4. Exuberance, more than enough.

For well I wot, most mighty sovereign,
That all this famous antique history,
Of some th' abundance of an idle brain,
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenser.

ABU'NDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

God, the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more.
Paradise Lost, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the vessels are in a state of too great rigidity, so as not to yield, a strong projectile motion occasions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; especially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Fully stored. It is followed sometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but some ages before these were found out, and was abundant with all things at first; and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put so much to the use of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiously. Burnet.

4. It is applied generally to things, sometimes to persons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth.
Exod. xxxiv. 6.

ABU'NDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis, i. 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd,
Inward and outward both, his image fair.
Paradise Lost, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than sufficiently.

Ye saw the French tongue abundantly purified.
Sprat.

Heroic poetry has ever been esteemed the greatest work of human nature. In that rank has Aristotle placed it, and Longinus is full of the like expressions, that he abundantly confirms the other's testimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly supplied in the imaginations of friendship, and the repeated influences of a constant conversation. Rogers's Serm.

To ABU'SE, v. a. [abutor, abusus, Lat.]

In abuse, the verb, s has the sound of z; in the noun, the common sound.

1. To make an ill use of.

They that use this world, as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away.
1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverseness of men, no longer suffer his compassion to be abused. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To violate; to defile.

Arachne figured how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear. Spenser.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses me to damn me. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making gold: the work itself I judge to be possible; but the means hitherto propounded, are, in the practice, full of error.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 126.

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Not be with all these tempting words abus'd;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope.

4. To treat with rudeness; to reproach.

I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakesp. Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly.
1 Mac. vii. 34.

Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress us'd,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

The next criticism seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.

ABU'SE. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.

The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind.
Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
Paradise Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad custom.

The nature of things is such, that, if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly encrease.
Swift for Advancement of Religion.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and, through the deceit abused me, and, after the abuse, forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.

4. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong.
Samson Agonistes.

ABU'SER, n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that makes an ill use.

2. He that deceives.

Next thou, the abuser of thy prince's ear.
Denham's Sophy.

3. He that reproaches with rudeness.

4. A ravisher, a violater.

ABU'SIVE, adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.

The tongue moved gently first, and speech was low,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe.
Pope's Miscellanies.

Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To persecute the muse's fame,
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscel.

2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrates corrective power. Roscom.

3. Deceitful; a sense little used, yet not improper.

It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

ABU'SIVELY. adv. [from abuse.]

1. Improperly, by a wrong use.

The oil, abusively called spirit, of roses, swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other drawn by any limbeck. Boyle's Sceptical Chymist.

2. Reproachfully.

ABU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from abusive.] The quality of being abusive; foulness of language.

Pick out of mirth, like those out of thy grounds,
Profaneness, filthiness, abusiveness.
These are the scum, with which are vile abound:
The fine may spare these well, yet not go lose.
Herbert.

To

To ABU'T. v. n. obſolete. [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.] To end at, to border upon; to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Whoſe high upreared and abutting fronts
The narrow perilous ocean parts aſunder.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

The Looes are two ſeveral corporations, diſtinguiſhed by the addition of eaſt and weſt, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew.

ABU'TMENT, n. ſ. [from abut.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABU'TTAL. n. ſ. [from abut.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut. Dict.

ABY'SM. n. ſ. [abyſme, old Fr. now written contractedly abîme.] A gulf; the ſame with abyſs.

My good ſtars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and ſhot their fires
Into the abyſm of hell.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABY'SS. n. ſ. [abyſſus, Lat. ἄβυσσος, bottomleſs, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.

Who ſhall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyſs,
And, through the palpable obſcure, find out
This uncouth way.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 405.

Thy throne is darkneſs in th' abyſs of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the ſight;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And ſearch no farther than thyſelf reveal'd.
Dryden.

Jove was not more pleas'd
With infant nature, when his ſpacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and ſeas
To give it the firſt puſh, and ſee it roll
Along the vaſt abyſs. Addiſon, Guard. N° 110.

2. A great depth, a gulf; hyperbolically.

The yawning earth diſcloſ'd th' abyſs of hell.
Dryden's Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative ſenſe, that in which any thing is loſt.

For ſepulchres themſelves muſt crumbling fall
In time's abyſs, the common grave of all.
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. x.

If, diſcovering how far we have clear and diſtinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of thoſe things that are within the reach of our underſtandings, and launch not out into that abyſs of darkneſs, out of a preſumption that nothing is beyond our comprehenſion. Locke

4. The body of waters ſuppoſed at the centre of the earth.

We are here to conſider what is generally underſtood by the great abyſs, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the ſea, or ſubterraneous waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet's Theory.

5. In the language of divines, hell.

From that inſatiable abyſs,
Where flames devour, and ſerpents hiſs,
Promote me to thy ſeat of bliſs. Roſcommon.

AC, AK, or AKE.

Being initials in the names of places, as Acton, ſignify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak.
Gibſon's Camden.

ACACIA. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being ſuppoſed the inſpiſſated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of ſloes, boiled to the ſame conſiſtence.
Dictionnaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoux.

2. A tree ſo called here, though different from that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pſeudocacia, or Virginian acacia. Miller.

ACADE'MIAL. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADE'MIAN. n. ſ. [from academy.] A ſcholar of an academy or univerſity; a member of an univerſity. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, mentions a great feaſt made for the academians.

ACADE'MICAL, adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an univerſity.

He drew him firſt into the fatal circle, from a kind of reſolved privateneſs; where, after the academical life, he had taken ſuch a taſte of the rural, as I have heard him ſay, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired courſe. Wotton.

ACADEMI'CIAN. n. ſ. [academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally uſed in ſpeaking of the profeſſors in the academies of France.

ACADE'MICK. n. ſ. [from academy.] A ſtudent of an univerſity.

A young academic ſhall dwell upon a journal that treats of trade, and be laviſh in the praiſe of the author; while perſons ſkilled in thoſe ſubjects, hear the tattle with contempt.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ACADE'MICK. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an univerſity.

While through poetic ſcenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves.
Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACA'DEMIST. n. ſ. [from academy.] The member of an academy. This is not often uſed.

It is obſerved by the Pariſian academiſts, that ſome amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the ſea-calf or ſeal, hath his epiglottis extraordinarily large.
Ray on the Creation.

A'CADEMY. n. ſ. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on the firſt ſyllable, now frequently on the ſecond. Academia, Lat. from Academus of Athens, whoſe houſe was turned into a ſchool, from whom the Groves of Academe in Milton.]

1. An aſſembly or ſociety of men, uniting for the promotion of ſome art.

Our court ſhall be a little academy,
Still and contemplative in living arts.
Shakeſpeare's Love's Labour Loſt.

2. The place where ſciences are taught.

Amongſt the academies, which were compoſed by the rare genius of thoſe great men, theſe four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian ſchool, that of Sicyon, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

3. An univerſity.

4. A place of education, in contradiſtinction to the univerſities or public ſchools. The thing, and therefore the name, is modern.

ACANTHUS. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of the herb bears-breech, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapiter.

On either ſide
Acanthus, and each od'rous buſhy ſhrub,
Fenc'd up the verdant wall.
Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. iv. l. 696.

ACATALE'CTIC. n. ſ. [ἀκαταλήκτικος, Gr.] A verſe which has the complete number of ſyllables, without defect or ſuperfluity.

To ACCE'DE. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to; generally uſed in political accounts; as, another power has acceded to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

To ACCE'LERATE, v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to haſten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impulſe to motion, ſo as perpetually to increaſe.

Take new beer, and put in ſome quantity of ſtale beer into it; and ſee whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the groſſer parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 307.

By a ſkilful application of thoſe notices, may be gained the accelerating and bettering of fruits, and the emptying of mines, at much more eaſy rates than by the common methods. Glanvill, Sceſis.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the denſeſt part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Optics.

Spices quicken the pulſe, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and diſſipate the fluids; from whence leanneſs, pains in the ſtomach, loathings, and fevers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immenſity of ſpace
Returning, with accelerated courſe,
The ruſhing comet to the ſun deſcends.
Thomſ. Sum. l. 1690.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and uſed chiefly in philoſophical language; but it is ſometimes uſed on other occaſions.

In which council the king himſelf, whoſe continual vigilancy did ſuck in ſometimes cauſeleſs ſuſpicions, which few elſe knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a ſtudent now and then, what may employ the moſt uſeful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the moſt momentous enquiries. Watts.

ACCELERA'TION. n. ſ. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, diſcovered firſt by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the ſpaces through which it paſſes will be as the ſquares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the ſpaces.

2. The ſtate of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the exiſtence or non-exiſtence of empty ſpaces, either coacervate or interſperſed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in diſputes concerning them.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The act of haſtening.

Conſidering the languor enſuing that action in ſome, and the viſible acceleration it maketh of age in moſt, we cannot but think venery much abridgeth our days. Brown.

To ACCE'ND. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle, to ſet on fire; a word very rarely uſed.

Our devotion, if ſufficiently accended, would, as theirs, burn up innumerable books of this ſort.
Decay of Piety.

ACCE'NSION. n. ſ. [accenſio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the ſtate of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and, upon its accenſion, gives a crack or report, like the diſcharge of a gun, and makes an exploſion ſo forcible as ſometimes to kill the miners, ſhake the earth, and force bodies, of great weight and bulk, from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

A'CCENT. n. ſ. [accentus, Lat.]

1. The manner of ſpeaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know,

I know, Sir, I am no flatterer; he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. The ſound given to the ſyllable pronounced.

Your accent is ſomething finer than you could purchaſe in ſo removed a dwelling.
Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

3. In grammar, the marks made upon ſyllables, to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and uſage, ſeems to have regarded the tune of the voice; the acute accent raiſing the voice in ſome certain ſyllables to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depreſſing it lower, and both having ſome emphaſis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder.

4. Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence
Shall this our lofty ſcene be acted o'er,
In ſtates unborn, and accents yet unknown.
Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Winds on your wings to heav'n her accents bear;
Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear.
Dryd. Virg. Paſt. 3.

5. A modification of the voice, expreſſive of the paſſions or ſentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry
Will paſs unheard, will unregarded die;
When the rough ſeaman's louder ſhouts prevail,
When fair occaſion ſhews the ſpringing gale. Prior.

To A'CCENT. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.] formerly elevated at the ſecond ſyllable, now at the firſt.

1. To pronounce, to ſpeak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got ſomebody to mark the laſt ſyllable but one, where it is long, in words above two ſyllables (which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the goſpels, and avoid underſtanding them in Latin, if ſhe can. Locke on Education, § 177.

2. In poetry; to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you that before
Have ſerv'd my youth to vent ſome wanton cries,
And, now congeal'd with grief, can ſcarce implore
Strength to accent, Here my Albertus lies! Wotton.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuer, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUA'TION. n. ſ. [from accentuate.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCE'PT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

1. To take with pleaſure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is diſtinguiſhed from receive, as ſpecific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleaſure in you, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.
Malachi, i. 10.

God is no reſpecter of perſons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciouſly pleaſed to accept this tender of my duty.
Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by ſubmitting ſway,
Yet have your humour moſt when you obey. Pope.

2. It is uſed in a kind of juridical ſenſe; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty.

They ſlaughter'd many of the gentry, for whom no ſex or age could be accepted for excuſe. Sidney.

His promiſe Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the firſt he made.
Dryden's Fables.

Thoſe who have defended the proceedings of our negociators at the treaty of Gertruydenburgh, dwell upon their zeal and patience in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands, but ſay nothing of the probability that France would ever accept them. Swift.

3. In the language of the Bible, to accept perſons, is to act with perſonal and partial regard.

He will ſurely reprove you, if ye do ſecretly accept perſons. Job, xiii. 10.

4. It is ſometimes uſed with the particle of.

I will appeaſe him with the preſent that goeth before me, and afterward I will ſee his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Geneſis, xxxii. 20.

ACCEPTABI'LITY. n. ſ. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be ſhed, for the remiſſion of our ſins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ACCE'PTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by ſome with the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the ſecond, which is more analogical.

1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleaſing. It is uſed with the particle to before the perſon accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'ſt to be my help,
And gav'ſt me as thy perfect gift, ſo good,
So fit, ſo acceptable, ſo divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill.
Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii.

I do not ſee any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by uſing all honeſt arts to make themſelves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

After he had made a peace ſo acceptable to the church, and ſo honourable to himſelf, he died with an extraordinary reputation of ſanctity.
Addiſon on Italy.

ACCE'PTABLENESS. n. ſ. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableneſs of the conjunction. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

ACCE'PTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; ſo as to pleaſe; with the particle to. For the accent, ſee ACCEPTABLE.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he ſuffers, ſo he be the friend of Chriſt; nor where nor when he prays, ſo he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

If you can teach them to love and reſpect other people, they will, as your age requires it, find ways to expreſs it acceptably to every one.
Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCE'PTANCE. n. ſ. [acceptance, Fr.]

1. Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his ſovereignty, they alſo accepted of his laws; why then ſhould any other laws now be uſed amongſt them?
Spenſer's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we muſt alſo tell him our noble acceptance of them.
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

Thus I imbolden'd ſpake, and freedom us'd
Permiſſive, and acceptance found.
Paradiſe Loſt. b. viii. l. 435.

Some men cannot be fools with ſo good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

2. The meaning of a word as it is received or underſtood; acceptation is the word now commonly uſed.

That pleaſure is man's chiefeſt good, becauſe indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleaſure, is an aſſertion moſt certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only falſe but odious: for, according to this, pleaſure and ſenſuality paſs for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this ſenſe, alters the ſubject of the diſcourſe. South.

ACCE'PTANCE. [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himſelf, for ever, to allow a former act done by another, whether it be in itſelf good or not. Cowel.

ACCEPTA'TION. n. ſ. [from accept.]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large ſenſe ſeems now wholly out of uſe.

Yet, poor ſoul! knows he no other, but that I do ſuſpect, neglect, yea, and deteſt him? For, every day, he finds one way or other to ſet forth himſelf unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldneſs of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

2. Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and ſacrifice, ſlew him; making himſelf the firſt manſlayer, and his brother the firſt martyr. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World, b. i.

3. The ſtate of being acceptable; regard.

Some things, although not ſo required of neceſſity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from ſalvation, are, notwithſtanding, of ſo great dignity and acceptation with God, that moſt ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker, b. ii.

They have thoſe enjoyments only as the conſequences of the ſtate of eſteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours.
Locke on Education, § 53.

4. Acceptance in the juridical ſenſe. This ſenſe occurs rarely.

As, in order to the paſſing away a thing by gift, there is required a ſurrender of all right on his part that gives, ſo there is required alſo an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a diſcourſe upon the ſeveral queſtions, and what acceptation theſe words and expreſſions had.
Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or ſolid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedneſs and coherency, and the moſt rapid inteſtine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentl. Serm.

ACCE'PTER. n. ſ. [from accept.] The perſon that accepts.

ACCEPTILA'TION. n. ſ. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law, importing the remiſſion of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, teſtifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCE'PTION. n. ſ. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received ſenſe of a word; the meaning. Not in uſe.

That this hath been eſteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I ſhall teſtify by one evidence, which gave me the firſt hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCE'SS. n. ſ. [In ſome of its ſenſes, it ſeems derived from acceſſus; in others, from acceſſio, Lat. accès, Fr.]

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

The acceſs of the town was only by a neck of land. Bacon.

There remained very advantageous acceſſes for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very ſlender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends,
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird presumes to steer his airy flight.
Dryden's Æneid, vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are deny'd access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
Shakespeare.

They go commission'd to require a peace,
And carry presents to procure access.
Dryden's Æneid, vii. l. 209

He grants what they besought;
Instructed, that to God is no access
Without Mediator, whose high office now
Moses in figure bears.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii. l. 239.

3. Encrease, enlargement, addition.

The gold was accumulated, and stone treasures, for the most part; but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprize. Bacon.

Nor think superfluous their aid;
I, from the influence of thy looks, receive
Access in every virtue; in thy sight
More wise, more watchful, stronger.
Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity.
Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

The reputation
Of virtuous actions past, if not kept up
With an access, and fresh supply, of new ones,
Is lost and soon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used, after the French, to signify the returns or fits of a distemper; but this sense seems yet scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases,
More desperate than their first accesses. Hudibras.

ACCESSARINESS. n. s. [from accessary.] The state of being accessary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the mischiefs. Decay of Piety.

ACCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which see; but now more commonly used than the proper word.] That which, without being the chief constituent of a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessary hereunto, those things that so belong to the way of salvation, &c. Hooker, b. iii. § 3.

He hath taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to rebellion.
Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCE'SSIBLE. adj. [accessibilis, Lat. accessible, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure, to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to discover themselves, while the plainer and more accessible truths, and despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Decay of Piety.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more applicate to particular occasions. Rogers.

ACCE'SSION. n. s. [accessio, Lat, accession, Fr.]

1. Increase by something added, enlargement, augmentation.

Nor could all the king's bounties, nor his own large accessions, raise a fortune to his heir; but after vast sums of money, and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

There would not have been found the difference here set down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received some little accession during the trial.
Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people, and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it. Swift.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper discharge of such over-proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them.
Rogers's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares
Against my late accession to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive his argument
Is with more force against Achilles bent?
Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's accession to the throne.

ACCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

ACCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to increase it; additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Hooker.

ACCESSORY. n. s. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr. This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also, that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof; for his presence makes him also a principal, wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not prepensed. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory by statute, is he that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed, an offence made felony by statute. Cowel.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against, till the principal has received his trial. Spenser. State of Ireland.

But pause, my soul! and study, ere thou fall
On accidental joys, th' essential.
Still before accessories to abide
A trial, must the principal be try'd. Donne.

Now were all transform'd
Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
To his bold riot. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x. l. 520.

2. Applied to things.

An accessory is said to be that which does accede unto some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal. Ayliffe.

ACCIDENCE. n. s. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Latin.] The little book containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess I do want eloquence,
And never yet did learn mine accidence.
Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT. n. s. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If she were but the body's accident,
And her sole being did in it subsist,
As white in snow she might herself absent,
And in the body's substance not be miss'd.
Sir J. Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before: or it is that mode which may be separated or abolished from its subject. Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what compositions of letters are, by consent and institution, to signify such certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen; casualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in physick, according wherunto, as no wise man will demean himself to be cured, if there be joined with his delicate some special accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the same infirmity have without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the least, unprofitable. Hooker, l. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, make it one common field and pasture with the inclosure of Eden. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Our joy is turn'd
Into perplexity, and new amaze;
For whither is he gone? What accident
Hath rapt him from us? Paradise Regained.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn.
Dryden's Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident.
Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDE'NTAL. n. s. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property nonessential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidentals.
Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, nonessential; used with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumstances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

This is accidental to a state or religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotson.

2. Casual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.
Shakespeare's Meas. for Meas.

So shall you hear
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;

Of

Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cause.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Look upon things of the most accidental and mutable nature; accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's prescience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us.
South's Sermons.

3. In the following passage it seems to signify adventitious.

Ay, such a minister as wind to fire,
That adds an accidental fierceness to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; nonessentially.

Other points no less concern the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenser's St. of Irel.

I conclude choler accidentally bitter, and acrimonious, but not in itself. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Casually, fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to preferment, yet the world is so corrupted, that no man can reasonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS. n. s. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental.
Dict.

ACCI'PIENT. n. s. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps sometimes used for recipient.
Dict.

To ACCI'TE. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call, to summons; a word not in use now.

Our coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remember'd) all our state,
And (heav'n consigning to my good intents)
No prince, no peer, shall have just cause to say,
Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

ACCLA'IM. n. s. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably first the verb acclaim, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise, acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,
Thee only extoll'd.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii. l. 397.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims, and vast applause, is rent.
Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMA'TION. n. s. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applause; such as those with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of Christian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to utter certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jesus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd
Among those friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy, and acclamations loud, that one,
That, of so many myriads fall'n, yet one
Return'd, not lost. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be ruined plausibly, and to be ushered to their destruction with panegyrick and acclamation. South.

ACCLI'VITY. n. s. [from acclivus, Lat.] The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the ascent of an hill is the acclivity, the descent is the declivity. Quincy.

The men, leaving their wives and youngest children below, do, not without some difficulty, clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and make butter and cheese, and do all the dairy-work. Ray on the Creation.

ACCLI'VOUS. adj. [acclivus, Lat.] Rising with a slope.

To ACCLO'Y. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in an ill sense; to crowd, to stuff full; a word almost obsolete.

At the well head the purest streams arise:
But mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys.
Fairy Queen.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
With soothing words renew'd, him thus accosts.
Parad. Reg.

I first accosted him: I su'd, I sought,
And, with a loving force, to Phenous brought.
Dryd. Æneid.

ACCO'STABLE. adj. [from accost.] Easy of access; familiar. Not in use.

They were both indulgible, strong, and high-natured men, yet of sweet and accostable nature, and open-handed, living in the press and affluence of popular influences. Wotton.

ACCO'UNT, n. f. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. it was originally written accompt, which see; but, by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty.
Shakesp. Timon.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping his accounts (which is a business of reason more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not be amiss, that I then from thence forth require him to do it in all the concernments. Locke on Educ.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, saith the Preacher, counting one to one, to find out the account.
Ecclesiasticus, viii. 27.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the vessels that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolk, was in little account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was for the holy temple.
2 Macab. xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher. H. of E. L. v. § 35.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Dufresn.

4. Profit; advantage; to turn to account is to produce advantage.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Add. Spect. № 399.

5. Distinction, dignity, rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophising Eumæus, it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction. Pope's Odyssey; notes.

6. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what it was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three. Swift.

7. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard; consideration; sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on my account. Philemon, i. 8.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account.
Addison's Cato.

8. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

9. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Matt. xix. 23, 24.

10. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender. Locke.

11. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it comes to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily. Locke.

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power so too, and impossible to be inherited. Locke.

12. An opinion previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea, there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land forces under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon's Considerations upon War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the sight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too. L'Estrange, Fab. cxxvii.

13. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history.
Addison.

14. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as a bailiff toward his master, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

The calendar months are likewise arbitrarily and unequally settled by the same power, by which months we, to this day, account, and they measure and make up, that which we call the Julian year. Holder on Time.

2. To give an account, to assign the causes; in which sense it is followed by the particle for.

If any one should ask, why our general continued so easy to the last? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unnatural love of wealth, which his best friends allow to be his predominant passion. Swift.

3. To make up the reckoning; to answer; with for.

Then thou shalt see him plung'd, when least his fears,
At once accounting for his deep arrears.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. xiii.

They have no uneasy presages of a future reckoning, wherein the pleasures they now taste must be accounted for, and may, perhaps, be outweighed by the pains which shall then lay hold of them.
Atterbury's Sermons.

4. To appear as the medium, by which any thing may be explained.

Such as have a fault, circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; because the increase of the quantity of fresh chyle must make that circulation still more uneasy; which, indeed, is the case of consumptive and some asthmatic persons, and accounts for the symptoms they are troubled with after eating.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACCO'UNTABLE. adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who must answer for: followed by the particle to before the person, and for before the thing.

Accountable to none,
But to my conscience and my God alone.
Oldham.

ACCRETION. n. s. [accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, so as to increase it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No 602.

The changes seem to be effected by the exhaling of the moisture, which may leave the tinging corpuscles more dense, and something augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moisture. Newton's Opticks.

Infants support abstinence worst, from the quantity of aliment consumed in accretion.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACCRE'TIVE. adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that which by growth is added.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals: and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial; and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glanvill's Scepsis.

To ACCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one as with a hook; to gripe; to draw away by degrees what is another's.

ACCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from accroach.] The act of accroaching. Dict.

To ACCRU'E. v. n. [from the participle accrû, formed from accroître, Fr.]

1. To accede to, to be added to; as, a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accruing to the nature of God.
Hooker, b. v. § 54.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning, there accrues also a right to every one, by the same signs, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person to obliged to express himself. South's Sermons.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular, and must therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrues to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To append to, or arise from: as, an ill consequence; this sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle, as in many other particulars, so likewise in this, did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, before the hazard that might accrue from the disrespects of ignorant persons. Wotton.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or arise; as, profits.

The yearly benefit that, out of those his works, accrueth to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds. Carew's Surv.

The great profits which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his trade, have set several of the states of Italy on the same project.
Addison on Italy.

5. To follow, as loss; a vitious use.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government until it comes to take root in the nation. Temple's Misc.

ACCUBA'TION. n. s. [from accubo, to lie down to, Lat.] The ancient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear, that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very few nations.
Browne's Vulgar Errours.

To ACCU'MB. v. a. [accumbo, Lat.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner. Dict.

ACCU'MBENT. adj. [accumbens, Lat.] Leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or, more properly, accumbent posture in eating, was introduced after the first Punic war. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To ACCU'MULATE. v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up, to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money; or figuratively, as, to accumulate merit or wickedness.

If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horrors head horrors accumulate;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add.
Shakesp. Othello.

Crusht by imaginary treasons weight,
Which too much merit did accumulate.
Sir John Denham.

ACCUMULA'TION. n. s. [from accumulate.]

1. The act of accumulating.

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he achiev'd by th' minute, lost his favour.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

Some, perhaps, might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another.
Howel.

2. The state of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in some people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhausted, it looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humours in the body. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ACCU'MULATIVE. adj. [from accumulate.]

1. That which accumulates.
2. That which is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekness, it then assumes another accumulative guilt, and stands answerable not only for its own positive ill, but for all the accidental, which it causes in the sufferer. Government of the Tongue.

ACCUMULA'TOR. n. s. [from accumulate.] He that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the passive man, yet, without revenge, there would be no broils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries. Decay of Piety.

A'CCURACY. n. s. [accuratio, Lat.] Exactness, nicety.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move. More.

Quickness of imagination is seen in the invention, fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.

The man who hath the stupid ignorance, or hardened effrontery to insult the revealed will of God, or the petulant conceit to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogance to make his own perfections the measure of the Divinity; or, at best, that can collate a text, or quote an authority, with an insipid accuracy; or demonstrate a plain proposition, in all formality; these now are the only men worth mentioning. Delany.

We consider the uniformity of the whole design, accuracy of the calculations, and skill in restoring and comparing passages of ancient authors. Arbuthnot on Coins.

A'CCURATE. adj. [accuratus, Lat.]

1. Exact, as opposed to negligence or ignorance, applied to persons.
2. Exact, without defect or failure, applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Reaumure, that brightest ornament of France. Colson.

3. Determinate; preciſely fixed.

Thoſe conceive the celeſtial bodies have more accurate influences upon theſe things below, than indeed they have but in groſs. Bacon.

A'CCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an accurate manner; exactly, without errour, nicely.

The fine of incidence is either accurately, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the fine of refraction. Newton.

That all theſe diſtances, motions, and quantities of matter, ſhould be ſo accurately and harmoniouſly adjuſted in this great variety of our ſyſtem, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material cauſes, and muſt certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wiſdom. Bentley.

A'CCURATENESS. n. ſ. [from accurate.] Exactneſs, nicety.

But ſo netime after, ſuſpecting that in making this obſervation I had not determined the diameter of the ſphere with ſufficient accurateneſs, I repeated the experiment. Newton.

To ACCU'RSE. v. a. [See CURSE.] To doom to miſery; to invoke miſery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had accurſed it, that it ſhould never ſhine to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him. Hooker.

When Hildebrand accurſed and caſt down from his throne Henry IV. there were none ſo hardy as to defend their lord. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

ACCU'RSED. part. adj.

1. That which is curſed or doomed to miſery.

'Tis the moſt certain ſign the world's accurſt,
That the beſt things corrupted are and worſt.
Denham.

2. That which deſerves the curſe; execrable; hateful; deteſtable; and, by conſequence, wicked; malignant.

A ſwift blaſting
May ſoon return to this our ſuffering country,
Under a hand accurſed! Shakeſpear's Macbeth.

The chief part of the miſery of wicked men, and their accurſed ſpirit, the devils, is this, that they are of a diſpoſition contrary to God. Tillotſon.

They, like the ſeed from which they ſprung,
Accurſed,
Againſt the gods immortal hatred nurſt. Dryden.

ACCU'SABLE. adj. [from the verb accuſe.] That which may be cenſured; blameable; culpable.

There would be a manifeſt defect, and Nature's improviſion were nullis accuſabilis; that animal, ſo ſubject unto diſeaſes from bilious cauſes, ſhould want a proper conveyance for choler.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ACCUSA'TION. n. ſ. [from accuſe.]

1. The act of accuſing.

Thus they in mutual accuſation ſpent
The fruitleſs hours, but neither ſelf-condemning,
And of their vain conteſt appear'd no end. Milton.

2. The charge brought againſt any one by the accuſer.

You read
Theſe accuſations, and theſe grievous crimes
Committed by your perſon, and your followers.
Shakeſpeare.

All accuſation, in the very nature of the thing, ſtill ſuppoſing, and being founded upon ſome law: for where there is no law, there can be no tranſgreſſion; and where there can be no tranſgreſſion, I am ſure there ought to be no accuſation.
South.

3. [In the ſenſe of the courts.] A declaration of ſome crime preferred before a competent judge, in order to inflict ſome judgment on the guilty perſon.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

ACCU'SATIVE. adj. [accuſativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, ſignifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCU'SATORY. adj. [from accuſe.] That which produceth or containeth an accuſation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuſer ought to ſet forth, in the accuſatory libel, ſome certain and definite time. Ayliffe.

To ACCU'SE. v. a. [accuſo, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of before the ſubject of accuſation.

He ſtripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth;
And, calling weſtern winds, accuſ'd the ſpring of ſloth. Dryden's Virgil.

The profeſſors are accuſed of all the ill practices which may ſeem to be the ill conſequences of their principles. Addiſon.

2. It ſometimes admits the particle for.

Never ſend up a leg of a fowl at ſupper, while there is a cat or dog in the houſe, that can be accuſed for running away with it: But, if there happen to be neither, you muſt lay it upon the rats, or a ſtrange greyhound. Swift.

3. To blame or cenſure, in oppoſition to applauſe or juſtification.

Their conſcience bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another. Rom. ii. 15.

Your valour would your ſloth too much accuſe,
And therefore, like themſelves, they princes chooſe.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

ACCU'SER. n. ſ. [from accuſe.] He that brings a charge againſt another.

There are ſome perſons forbidden to be accuſers, on the ſcore of their ſex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils and infants; others, upon the account of ſome crimes committed by them; and others, on the ſcore of ſome filthy lucre they propoſe to gain thereby; others, on the ſcore of their conditions, as libertines againſt their patrons, and others, through a ſuſpicion of calumny, as having once already given falſe evidence; and, laſtly, others on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei. Ayliffe's Parergon.

—That good man, who drank the poiſonous draught,
With mind ſerene, and could not wiſh to ſee
His vile accuſer drink as deep as he. Dryden.

If the perſon accuſed maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuſer is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent perſon is quadruply recompenſed. Gulliver's Travels.

To ACCU'STOM. v. a. [accoûtumer, Fr.] To habituate, to enure, with the particle to. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

How ſhall we breathe in other air
Leſs pure, accuſtom'd to immortal fruits? Milton.

It has been ſome advantage to accuſtom one's ſelf to books of the ſame edition.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To ACCU'STOM. v. n. To be wont to do any thing. Obſolete.

A boat over freighted ſunk, and all drowned, ſaving one woman, that in her firſt popping up again, which moſt living things accuſtom, got hold of the boat. Carew.

ACCU'STOMABLE. adj. [from accuſtom.] Of long cuſtom or habit; habitual, cuſtomary.

An male even of the ſame original, extraction, and ſpecies, may be diverſified by accuſtomable reſidence in one climate, from what they are in another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCU'STOMABLY. adv. According to cuſtom.

Touching the king's fines accuſtomably paid for the purchaſing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them, and do therefore think that they grew up with the chancery.
Bacon's Alienation.

ACCU'STOMANCE. n. ſ. [accoûtumance, Fr.] Cuſtom, habit, uſe.

Through accuſtomance and negligence, and perhaps ſome other cauſes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others. Boyle.

ACCU'STOMARILY. adv. In a cuſtomary manner; according to common or cuſtomary practice.

Go on, rhetorick, and expoſe the peculiar eminency which you accuſtomarily marſhal before logic to public view. Cleaveland.

ACCU'STOMARY. adj. [from accuſtom.] Uſual, practiſed; according to cuſtom.

ACCU'STOMED. adj. [from accuſtom.] According to cuſtom; frequent; uſual.

Look how ſhe rubs her hands.—It is an accuſtomed action with her, to ſeem thus waſhing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

ACE. n. ſ. [As not only ſignified a piece of money, but any integer, from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As ſignified the whole inheritance. Arbuthnot on Coins.]

1. An unit; a ſingle point on cards or dice.

When lots are ſhuffled together in a lap, urn, or pitcher; or if a man blindfold caſts a die, what reaſon in the world can he have to preſume, that he ſhall draw a white ſtone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a ſize? South.

2. A ſmall quantity; a particle; an atom.

He will not bate an ace of abſolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it muſt go for an indiſputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world ſhall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

ACE'PHALOUS. adj. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughneſs, as moſt fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. ſ. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough ſour taſte.

2. Applied to men, ſharpneſs of temper; ſeverity.

True it is, that the talents for criticiſm, namely, ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, ſeem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION. n. ſ. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [aceſcens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to ſourneſs or acidity.

The ſame perſons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a ſufficient quantity of aceſcents; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACETO'SE. adj. That which has in it any thing ſour. Dict.

ACETO'SITY. n. ſ. [from acetoſe.] The ſtate of being acetoſe, or of containing ſourneſs. Dict.

ACE'TOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar, Lat.]

Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar; sour.

Raisins, which consist chiefly of the juice of grapes, inspissated in the skins or husks by the avolation of the superfluous moisture through their pores, being distilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acerous spirit. Boyle.

ACHE. n. s. [ace, Sax. ἄχος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable; the primitive manner being preserved chiefly in poetry, for the sake of the measure.] A continued pain. See AKE.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din. Shakespeare.

A coming show'r your shooting corns presage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage.
Swift.

To ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our senses are dulled and spent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly discerned object. Granville.

To ACHI'EVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform, to finish a design prosperously.

Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with sure success:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the less. Dryd.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time. Shakesp.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl.
Shakspeare.

Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton.

Show all the sports by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

ACHI'EVER. n. s. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers.
Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

ACHI'EVEMENT. n. s. [achevement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coast that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements still pursue.
Fairy Queen.

2. The escutcheon, or ensigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame, thy godly souls among,
High on the burnish'd roof, my banner shall be hung;
Rank'd with my champion' bucklers, and below,
With arms revers'd, th' achievement of the foe.
Dryden.

Achievement, in the first sense, is derived from achieve, as it signifies to perform; in the second, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

A'CHING. n. s. [from ache.] Pain; uneasiness.

When old age comes to wait upon a great and worthipful sinner, it comes attended with many painful girds and achings, called the gout. South.

*ACHOR. n. s. [a hor, Lat. ἄχως, Gr. furfur.] A species of the herpes; it appears like a crusty scab, which causes an itching upon the surface of the head, occasioned by a salt sharp serum oozing through the skin. Quincy.

A'CID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, sharp.

Wild trees last longer than garden trees; and in the same kind, those whose fruit is acid, more than those whose fruit is sweet.
Bacon's Natural History.

Acid, or sour, proceeds from a salt of the same nature, without mixture of oil; in austere tastes the oily parts have not disentangled themselves from the salts and earthy parts; such is the taste of unripe fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Liquors and substances are called acids, which being composed of pointed particles, affect the taste in a sharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with syrup of violets, when it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that syrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. s. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taste; sharpness; sourness.

Fishes, by the help of a dissolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meat, skin, bones, and all, into a chylous or cremor; and yet this liquor manifests nothing of acidity to the taste. Ray.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundance of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the case of acidity or sourness. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'CIDNESS. n. s. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

*ACI'DULÆ. n. s. [that is, aquæ acidulæ.] Medicinal springs impregnated with sharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum springs are. Quincy.

The acidulæ, or medical springs, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than usual, and even the ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with sulphur and other mineral, as long as the earthquake last. Woodward's Natural History.

To ACI'DULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a slight degree.

A diet of fresh unsalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient substances, sour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it seems, between the Latin and English, from agnosco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon cnapan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or person in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica,
In place of lord Bassanio and myself. Shakspeare.

None that acknowledge God, or providence,
Their souls eternity did ever doubt. Davies.

2. To confess; as, a fault.

For I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me. Psalm li. 3.

3. To own; as, a benefit; sometimes with the particle to before the person conferring the benefit.

His spirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Milton.

In the first place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the assistance he has given me in the beginning, and the prosecution of my present studies. Dryden.

ACKNO'WLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received. A Gallicism, reconnoissant.

He has shown his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compassionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and self-interested.
Dryden's Virgil.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. s. [from acknowledge.]

1. Confession of any character in another; as, existence, superiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a necessary connexion and chain of causes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; because it carries every thinking man to an original of every successive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Confession of the truth of any position.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the christian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker.

3. Confession of a fault.

4. Confession of a benefit received; gratitude.

5. Act of attestation to any confession; such as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never established, nor any acknowledgment of subjection made.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

6. Something given or done in confession of a benefit received.

The second is an acknowledgment to his majesty for the leave of fishing upon his coast; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right or usage, and custom on theirs, not determined or extinguished by any treaty between us, it may with justice be insisted on. Temple's Miscellanies.

*ACME. n. s. [ἀκμη, Gr.] The height of any thing; more especially used to denote the height of a distemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or first attack. 2. Anabasis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declension of the distemper. Quincy.

ACO'LOTHIST. n. s. [ἀκολουθος, Gr.] One of the lowest order in the Romish church, whose office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

It is duty, according to the papal law, when the bishop sings mass, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to see that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acolothist, to keep the sacred vessels. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'COLYTE. n. s. The same with ACOLOTHIST.

A'CONITE. n. s. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs-bane, but commonly used in poetical language for poison in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nourishes the lion's angry seed;
Nor poisonous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd.
Dryden.

Despair, that aconite does prove,
And cures an death to others' love,
That poison never yet withstood,
Does nourish mine, and turns to blood.
Granville.

A'CORN. n. s. [Æcepn, Sax. from ac, an oak, and corn, corn or grain; that is, the grain or fruit of the oak.] The seed or fruit born by the oak.

Errours, such as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.
Dryden's Ovid.

He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. Locke.

A'CORNED. adj. [from acorn.] Stored with acorns.

Like a full acorn'd boar. Shakespeare.

ACO'USTICKS. n. s. [Ακουστικα, of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of sounds.
2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUA'INT. v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to persons or things. It has with before the object.

We that acquaint ourselves with every zone,
And pass the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, are to ourselves unknown,
And unacquainted still with our own soul.
Davies.

There with thee, new welcome saint,
Like fortune may her soul acquaint. Milton.

Before a man can speak on any subject, it is necessary to be acquainted with it.
Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourselves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domestick and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourselves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own spirits. Watts's Improv.

2. To inform. With is more in use before the object than of.

But for some other reasons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business.
Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

A friend in the country acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought words and phrases, which were never before in those parts. Tatler.

ACQUA'INTANCE. n. s. [accointance, Fr.]

1. The state of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied as well to persons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance less with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies.
Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man lessens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we seldom hear of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities.
Addison.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God, let us study to resemble him. We must be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury.

2. Familiar knowledge, simply without a preposition.

Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue,
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Shakespeare.

This keeps the understanding long in converse with an object, and long converse brings acquaintance.
South.

In what manner he lived with those who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to say. Atterbury.

3. A slight or initial knowledge, short of friendship, as applied to persons.

I hope I am pretty near seeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance, because if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long noviciate of acquaintance should precede the vows of friendship. Bolingbroke.

4. The person with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have some knowledge, without the intimacy of friendship.

In this sense, the plural is, in some authors, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

But she, all vow'd unto the red-cross knight,
His wand'ring peril closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguish did torment.
Fairy Queen.

That young men travel under some tutor, I allow well, so that he be such a one that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to seek, what exercises or discipline the place yieldeth.
Bacon.

This, my lord, has justly acquired you as many friends, as there are persons who have the honour to be known to you; mere acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We see he is ashamed of his nearest acquaintances.
Bryde against Bentley.

ACQUA'INTED. adj. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That we of peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesp.

ACQUE'ST. n. s. [acqueſt, Fr. from acquerir, written by some acquiſt, with a view to the word acquire, or acquiſita.] Attachment, acquisition; the thing gained.

New acqueſts are more burden than strength.
Bacon.

Mud, reposed near the ostea of rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the sea, and preserving these shells as trophies and signs of its new acqueſts and encroachments.
Woodward.

To ACQUIE'SCE. v. n. [acquieſcer, Fr. acquieſcere, Lat.] To rest in, or remain satisfied with, without opposition or discontent. It has in before the object.

Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worthy to be examined than acquieſced in. Boyle.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wishing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, lastly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can pass before God for a man's willing of such things; and, consequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquieſce in an any ungrounded persuasion, that they will those things which really they not will, they fall thereby into a gross and fatal delusion. South.

He hath employed his transcendent wisdom and power, that by these he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquiesce. Grew.

ACQUIE'SCENCE. n. s. [from acquieſce.]

1. A silent appearance of content, distinguished on one side from avowed consent, on the other from opposition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought most averse from it, there appeared any sign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquieſcence in all the bishops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, rest, content.

Many indeed have given over their pursuits after fame, either from disappointment, or from experience of the little pleasure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldness of old age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquieſcence in their present enjoyments of it. Addison.

3. Submission, confidence.

The greatest part of the world take up their persuasions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquieſcence in the word of those who shall represent things to them under these characters. Southe.

ACQUI'RABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Those rational instincts, the connate principles engraven in the human soul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational consequence and argumentation, yet seem to be inscribed in the very crasis and texture of the soul, antecedent to any acquisition by industry or the exercise of the discursive faculty in man.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

To ACQUI'RE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.]

1. To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or transmitted by inheritance.

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he, we serve, 's away. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. To come to; to attain.

Motion cannot be perceived without the perception of its terms, viz. the parts of space which it immediately left, and those which it next acquires.
Glanville's Scepsis.

ACQUI'RED. particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's self, in opposition to those things which are bestowed by nature.

We are seldom at ease, and free enough from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses, out of that stock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns.
Locke.

ACQUI'RER. n. s. [from acquire.] The person that acquires; a gainer.

ACQUI'REMENT. n. s. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly used in opposition to the gifts of nature.

These his acquirements, by industry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature.
Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquiescence in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof; or so much as may palliate its just and substantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of a taste. The faculty must, in some degree, be born with us. Addison.

ACQUISI'TION. n. s. [acquiſitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquisition of them. Souths.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great Sir, all acquiſition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hoarding like a vulture to dismember the dying carcase; by which means it becomes only an acquiſition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a resurrection. Swift.

ACQUI'SITIVE.

Acqui'sitive. adj. [acquisitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquisitive but in his native ſoil; nature herſelf, as it were, claiming a final intereſt in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

Acqui'st. n. ſ. [See Acquest.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. Not in uſe.

His ſervant he with new acquiſt
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and conſolation hath diſmiſt. Milton.

To Acquit. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See Quit.]

1. To ſet free.

Ne do I wiſh (for wiſhing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual ſmart;
But joy her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captived heart. Spenſer.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to abſolve; oppoſed to condemn, either ſimply with an accuſative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the ſuffrage of the moſt and beſt he is already acquitted, and, by the ſentence of ſome, condemned. Dryden.

He that judges, without informing himſelf to the utmoſt that he is capable, cannot acquit himſelf of judging amiſs. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majeſty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not diſpirited with my afflictions, I have, by the bleſſing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in ſome meaſure, acquitted myſelf of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a ſimilar ſenſe, it is ſaid, The man hath acquitted himſelf well; that is, he hath diſcharged his duty.

Acqui'tment. n. ſ. [from acquit.] The ſtate of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or diſcharge of a man upon ſome precedent accuſation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cauſe had thereupon. South.

Acqui'ttal. n. ſ. In law, is a deliverance and ſetting free from the ſuſpicion or guiltineſs of an offence. Cowell.

The conſtant deſign of both theſe orators, was to drive ſome one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accuſed perſon. Swift.

To Acqui'ttance. v. a. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in preſent uſe.

But if black ſcandal and foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the ſequel of your impoſition,
Your mere enforcement ſhall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and ſtains thereof. Shakeſpeare.

Acqui'ttance. n. ſ. [from acquit.]

1. The act of diſcharging from a debt.

But ſoon ſhall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Juſtice ſhall not return, as bounty, ſcorn'd. Milton.

2. A writing teſtifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances
For ſuch a ſum, from ſpecial officers
To Edward his father. Shakeſpeare's Love's Labour Loſt.

They quickly pay their debt, and then
Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne.

The ſame man bought and ſold to himſelf, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot.

A'cre. n. ſ. [Æcre, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thouſand eight hundred and forty ſquare yards. Dict.

Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakeſp. King Lear.

A'crid. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taſte; bitter; ſo as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taſte.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the ſharp particles of the firſt being involved in a greater quantity of oil than thoſe of the laſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Acrimo'nious. adj. Abounding with acrimony; ſharp; corroſive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itſelf, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, muſt be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Conſumptions.

A'crimony. n. ſ. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpneſs, corroſiveneſs.

There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, ſow-thiſtles, ſpurge. The cauſe may be an inception of putrefaction: for thoſe milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they ſhould be lenitive. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

The chymiſts define ſalt, from ſome of its properties, to be a body fuſible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle glebes or cryſtals, ſoluble in water, ſo as to diſappear, not malleable, and having ſomething in it which affects the organs of taſte with a ſenſation of acrimony or ſharpneſs. Arbuthnot.

2. Sharpneſs of temper, ſeverity, bitterneſs of thought or language.

John the Baptiſt ſet himſelf, with much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this ſenſeleſs arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'critude. n. ſ. [from acrid.] An acrid taſte; a biting heat on the palate.

In green vitriol, with its aſtringent and ſweetiſh taſtes, is joined ſome acritude. Grew's Muſæum.

He hangs between in doubt to act or reſt. Pope.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable of being compelled to any of its actings, yet it is capable of being made to act with more or leſs difficulty, according to the different impreſſions it receives from motives or objects. South.

3. To practiſe arts or duties; to conduct one's ſelf.

'Tis plain that ſhe, who for a kingdom now
Would ſacrifice her love, and break her vow,
Not out of love, but intereſt, acts alone,
And would, ev'n in my arms, be thinking of a throne. Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada.

The deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The ſplendor of his office, is the token of that ſacred character which he inwardly bears: and one of theſe ought conſtantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole courſe of his adminiſtration. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorouſly to exert thoſe powers, and act up to thoſe advantages to which it reſtores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To produce effects in ſome paſſive ſubject.

Hence 'tis we wait the wond'rous cauſe to find
How body acts upon impaſſive mind. Garth's Diſpenſary.

The ſtomach, the inteſtines, the muſcles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment; beſides, the chyle is not ſucked, but ſqueezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To Act. v. a.

1. To

1. To bear a borrowed character; as, a ſtage-player.

Honour and ſhame from no condition riſe;
Act well your part, there all the honour lies. Pope.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus purſu'd. Dryden.

3. To actuate; to put in motion; to regulate the movements.

Moſt people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by ſtrange and irrational changes. South.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as falſe as Judas, and, in the whole courſe of their converſation, act, and are acted, not by devotion, but deſign. South.

We ſuppoſe two diſtinct, incommunicable conſciouſneſſes acting the ſame body, the one conſtantly by day, the other by night; and, on the other ſide, the ſame conſciouſneſs acting by intervals two diſtinct bodies. Locke.

ACT. n. ſ. [actum, Lat.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

A lower place, note well,
May make too great an act:
Better to leave undone than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame.
Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The conſcious wretch muſt all his acts reveal;
Loth to confeſs, unable to conceal;
From the firſt moment of his vital breath,
To his laſt hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Agency; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of theſe thy compounds on ſuch creatures as
We count not worth the hanging; but none human;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act, and by them gather
Their ſeveral virtues and effects.
Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action; the performance of exploits; production of effects.

It is ſo much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the ſun is always carrying his light to ſome part or other of the world. Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will an act, his word and work the ſame.
Prior.

4. The doing of ſome particular thing; a ſtep taken; a purpoſe executed.

This act perſuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her,
Is practice only. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

5. A ſtate of reality; effect.

The ſeeds of herbs and plants at the firſt are not in act, but in poſſibility, that which they afterward grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlaſtingly is whatſoever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not; all other things beſides are ſomewhat in poſſibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

Sure they're conſcious
Of ſome intended miſchief, and are fled
To put it into act. Denham's Sophy.

6. Incipient agency; tendency to an effort.

Her legs were buſkin'd, and the left before,
In act to ſhoot; a ſilver bow ſhe bore. Dryden.

7. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition required by Chriſt, the repentance he came to preach, will, in that laſt ſcene of their laſt act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five acts are juſt the meaſure of a play.
Roſcommon.

8. A decree of a court of juſtice, or edict of a legiſlature.

They make edicts for uſury to ſupport uſurers, repeal daily any wholeſome act eſtabliſhed againſt the rich, and provide more piercing ſtatutes daily to chain up and reſtrain the poor.
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

You that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

9. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all thoſe matters which relate to judicial proceedings; and being reduced into writing by a public notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge. Ayliffe.

A'CTION. n. ſ. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or ſtate of acting, oppoſite to reſt.

O noble Engliſh! that could entertain
With half their forces the full power of France;
And let another half ſtand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

2. An act or thing done; a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination inſtead of a good action, where that action may be done; nay, ſo much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not ſeconded by a good action, the want of that action is made ſo much the more criminal and inexcuſable. South.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better, therefore, that the earth ſhould move about its own center, and make thoſe uſeful viciſſitudes of night and day, than expoſe always the ſame ſide to the action of the ſun. Bentley.

He has ſettled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne.

4. The ſeries of events repreſented in a fable.

This action ſhould have three qualifications. Firſt, it ſhould be but one action; ſecondly, it ſhould be an entire action; and, thirdly, it ſhould be a great action. Addiſon.

5. Geſticulation; the accordance of the motions of the body with the words ſpoken; a part of oratory.

—He that ſpeaks doth gripe the hearer's wriſt,
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakeſp. King John.

Our orators are obſerved to make uſe of leſs geſture or action than thoſe of other countries.
Addiſon.

6. [In law.] It is uſed with the preposition againſt before the perſon, and for before the thing.

Actions are perſonal, real, and mixt: action perſonal belongs to a man againſt another, by reaſon of any contract, offence, or cauſe, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or ſome other, for whoſe fact he is to anſwer. Action real is given to any man againſt another, that poſſeſſes the thing required or ſued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt, is that which lies as well againſt or for the thing which we ſeek, as againſt the perſon that hath it; called mixt, becauſe it hath a mixt reſpect both to the thing and to the perſon.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us; as a ſum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at ſome penalty or puniſhment in the party ſued, be it corporal or pecuniary: as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniouſly ſlain ſhall purſue the law againſt the murderer. Action mixt is that which ſeeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty alſo for the unjuſt detaining of the ſame.

Action upon the caſe, is an action given for redreſs of wrongs done without force againſt any man, by law not ſpecially provided for.

Action upon the ſtatute, is an action brought againſt a man upon breach of a ſtatute. Cowell.

There was never man could have a juſter action againſt filthy fortune than I, ſince, all other things being granted me, her blindneſs is the only let.
Sidney.

For our reward then,
Firſt, all our debts are paid; dangers of law;
Actions, decrees, judgments, againſt us quitted.
B. Jonſon.

7. In the plural, in France, the ſame as ſtocks in England.

A'CTIONABLE. adj. [from action.] That which admits an action in law to be brought againſt it; puniſhable.

His proceſs was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought elſe, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition.
Howel's Vocal Forreſt.

No man's face is actionable: theſe ſingularities are interpretable from more innocent cauſes. Collier.

A'CTIONARY, or A'CTIONIST. n. ſ. [from action.] One that has a ſhare in actions or ſtocks.

A'CTION-TAKING. adj. Accuſtomed to reſent by means of law; litigious.

A knave, a raſcal, a filthy worſted-ſtocking knave; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave. Shakeſp.

ACTITA'TION. n. ſ. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps uſed only by the author alleged.

As ſnow and ice, eſpecially being holpen, and their cold activated by nitre or ſalt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours; ſo it may be, it will turn wood or ſtiff clay into ſtone, in longer time. Bacon.

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting.

Theſe particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with ſuch paſſive laws of motion, as naturally reſult from that force, but alſo they are moved by certain active principles, ſuch as is that of gravity, and that which cauſes fermentation, and the coheſion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

2. That which acts, oppoſed to paſſive, or that which ſuffers.

—When an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to paſſives, correſpondency
Only his ſubject was. Donne.

If you think that, by multiplying the additaments in the ſame proportion that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the paſſive will add more reſiſtance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon.

3. Buſy, engaged in action; oppoſed to idle or ſedentary, or any ſtate of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action that muſt praiſe bring forth,
Without which, ſhow advice is little worth;
Yet they who give good counſel, praiſe deſerve,
Tho' in the active part they cannot ſerve. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in theſe men freſh experience, how dangerous ſuch active errors are. Hooker.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.

Some bend the ſtubborn bow for victory;
And ſome with darts their active ſineſs try. Dryden.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that which ſignifies action, as I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; buſily; nimbly. In an active ſignification; as, the word is uſed actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickneſs; nimbleneſs.

nimbleneſs. This is a word more rarely uſed than activity.

What ſtrange agility and activeneſs do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exerciſe! Wilkins's Math. Magick.

ACTI'VITY, n. ſ. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or perſons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaſeth the activity of cold. Bacon.

Our adverſary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our ſoul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR, n. ſ. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts, or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for ſucceſſion, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himſelf but a tranſcript of Nero in his mind, and would gladly enough ſee ſuch pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himſelf. South.

2. He that perſonates a character; a ſtage-player.

Would you have
Such an Herculean actor in the ſcene,
And not this hydra? They muſt ſweat no leſs
To fit their properties, than t' expreſs their parts. Ben Jonſon.

When a good actor doth his part preſent,
In every act he our attention draws,
That at the laſt he may find juſt applauſe. Denham.

Theſe falſe beauties of the ſtage are no more laſting than a rainbow; when the actor ceaſes to ſhine upon them, they vaniſh in a twinkling. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'CTRESS. n. ſ. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.

Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actreſs in the Æneid; but the part ſhe acts is very ſhort, and none of the moſt admired circumſtances of that divine work. Addiſon.

We ſprights have juſt ſuch natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures;
And therefore I that was an actreſs here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryden.

2. A woman that plays on the ſtage.

A'CTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That which compriſes action.

In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her ſay? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton.

3. In act; not purely in ſpeculation.

For he that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then what muſt he expect, that ſtill proceeds
To finiſh ſin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryden.

ACTUA'LITY. n. ſ. [from actual.] The ſtate of being actual.

The actuality of theſe ſpiritual qualities is thus impriſoned, though their potentiality be not quite deſtroyed; and thus a craſs, extended, impenetrable, paſſive, diviſible, unintelligent ſubſtance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really

All mankind acknowledge themſelves able and ſufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the Chronicles, and you will think you were reading a hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael or Judah, where the hiſtorians were actually inſpired, and where, by a particular ſcheme of providence, the kings were diſtinguiſhed by judgments or bleſſings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worſhip of the true God. Addiſon.

Though our temporal proſpects ſhould be full of danger, or though the days of ſorrow ſhould actually overtake us, yet ſtill we muſt repoſe ourſelves on God. Rogers.

A'CTUALNESS. n. ſ. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. ſ. [actuarius, Lat.] The regiſter who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppoſe the judge ſhould ſay, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the cuſtody of them with himſelf: certainly, in this caſe, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe.

A'CTUATE. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the paſſive reception of the will, like form clothing with matter, grow actuate into a third and diſtinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or increaſe the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living ſpirit, and ſeems, by ſome vital irradiations to be actuated into this luſtre. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the ſubduing of every reigning ſin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greateſt abilities are moſt ſeized with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the leaſt actuated by it. Addiſon.

Our paſſions are the ſprings which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

ACTUO'SE. adj. [from act.] That which hath ſtrong powers of action: a word little uſed.

To A'CUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To ſharpen, to invigorate with any powers of ſharpneſs.

Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, and debauching with ſtrong wines, do inflame and acuate the blood, wherein it is capacitated to corrode the lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

ACU'LEATE. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That which has a point or ſting; prickly; that which terminates in a ſharp point.

ACU'MEN. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſharp point; figuratively, quickneſs of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Ariſtarchus in common converſation, to ſignify genius or natural acumen. Pope.

ACU'MINATED. particip. adj. Ending in a point; ſharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the reſt, but ſcemeth, as it were, cut off.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I appropriate this word, Nihil me tangere, to a ſmall round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unleſs touched or rubbed, or exaſperated by topicks. Wiſeman.

ACU'TE. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; oppoſed to obtuſe or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuſe and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal baſes and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative ſenſe applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; oppoſed to dull or ſtupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has ſtarted the notion of ſeeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the ſenſes, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our ſenſes altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward ſcheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute diſeaſe. Any diſeaſe, which is attended with an increaſed velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days; oppoſed to chronical. Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that which raiſes or ſharpens the voice.

ACU'TELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; ſharply: it is uſed as well in the figurative as primitive ſenſe.

He that will look into many parts of Aſia and America, will find men reaſon there, perhaps, as acutely as himſelf, who yet never heard of a ſyllogiſm. Locke.

ACU'TENESS. n. ſ. [from acute, which ſee.]

1. Sharpneſs.

2. Force of intellects.

They would not be ſo apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteneſs and penetration of their underſtandings. Locke.

3. Quickneſs and vigour of ſenſes.

If eyes ſo framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteneſs, which, would it diſcover the ſecret contrivance of the machine, robs him of its uſe. Locke.

4. Violence and ſpeedy criſis of a malady.

We apply preſent remedies to a ſtrong, to the acuteneſs, reſpecting either the quality of the diſeaſe, and preternaturalneſs of the accidents, or the riſing and ſetting of it. Harvey.

5. Sharpneſs of ſound.

Theſe acuteneſs of ſound will ſeem, that whilſt, to the eye, the tail ſeems to be at reſt, yet the minute parts of it continue a very brisk motion, without which they could not ſtrike on the ear. Boyle.

ADA'CTED. participial adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little uſed. The verb adact is not uſed. Dict.

A'DAGE. n. ſ. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity, a proverb.

Shallow men, or falſe pretenders to certainty, and all, contrary to the adage, ſcience had no friends but enemies. Glanvil's Scepſis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! cold a ſpeculation,
Do theſe not apply that adage to the life,
As if 'tis nothing worth that is not uſeful,
And ſcience is not ſcience till reveal'd? Dryden.

ADA'GIO. n. ſ. [Italian, at leiſure.] A term uſed by muſicians, to mark a ſlow time.

A'DAMANT. n. ſ. [adamas, Lat. from α and δάμα, Gr. that is inſuperable, inſrangible.]

1. A ſtone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardneſs.

So great a foe my name amongſt them ſpread,
That they ſuppoſ'd I could rend bars of ſteel,
And ſpurn in pieces poſts of adamant. Shakeſpeare.

Satan, with vaſt and haughty ſtrides advanc'd,
Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold. Milton.

Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with abſolute decrees,
And write whatever time ſhall bring to paſs,
With pens of adamant, on plates of braſs. Dryden.

2. The diamond.

Hardneſs, wherein ſome ſtones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other ſtones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious ſtones of chymiſts, in imitation, being eaſily detected by an ordinary lapidiſt. Ray on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadſtone.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true as steel. Shakespeare.

Let him change his lodging from one part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.

ADAMANTE'AN. adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

This word occurs, perhaps, only in this passage.

ADAMA'NTINE. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high
With adamantine columns, threat'ning sky. Dryden.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,
In sunder rend the adamantine chain.
What golden links, effects and causes be,
And which to God's own chair doth fix the union? Davies.

An eternal density must have possessed the world, which had once been used and framed exceedingly with the adamantine chain of specific gravities, that mighty hand of God only can dissolve and find, by the force of fire, the bonds of those principles, which nature hath framed it by, and so reduce it to Bentley.

Pope.

ADAM'S-APPLE. n. s. [in anatomy] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADAPT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to fit; to proportion.

Let us, before we leave this place,
Make some memorial of our grief,
For us and our posterity,
Of this day's fatal enterprise. Sandys.

It is not the loud report that wounds the ear, but a sound properly adapted to the cavity of the ear, as well as to the thing heard. Ray on the Creation.

ADAPTA'TION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some [creatures] to a middle nature, that is, of bird and beast, as bats; yet are there parts for flying, that we cannot define the degree and proportion of, other than adaptation or consent of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some peculiar motion in the pressed bodies, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, small, irregularities of the one, and the pores or cavities of the other, whereby the two bodies do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together. Boyle.

ADA'PTION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work to shew all the necessary, the wise contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne.

ADA'PTNESS. n. s. [for adaptedness, from adapt.]

Some notes are to display the adaptness of the sound to the sense. Dr. Newton.

This word I have found no where else.

To ADCO'RPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another, more usually wrote accorporate; which see.

To ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference,
If to his words it adds one grain of sense. Dryden.

They, whose names have the highest flown,
Add not to his immortal memory,
But do an act of friendship to their own. Dryden.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another. To add to is proper, but to add together seems a solecism.

Whatsoever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years. Locke.

ADDABIL. adj. [from add.] That to which something may be added. Addible is more proper. It signifies more properly that which may be added.

The first number in every addition is called the addend number, the other, the number of numbers added, and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum. Cocker.

ADDECIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDEEM. v. n. [from deem.] To esteem; to account. This word is now out of use.

She learn to be addeem'd so worthless base,
As to be wedded to such an infamy.
Daniel's Civil Wars.

ADDER n. s. [Ættren, Ættron, Naddpe, as it seems from ettren, Sax. poison.] A serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile; perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Oh! is the adder better than the eel,
Because the painted skin contents the eye? Shakespeare.

The adder did it; for, with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung. Shakspeare.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her cautious defending of her head. Taylor.

ADDER'S-GRASS. n. s. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

ADDER'S-TONGUE. n. s. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells. Miller.

The most common simples are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, sanicle, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's tongue. Wiseman's Surgery.

ADDER'S-WORT. n. s. An herb so named, on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

ADDIBLE. adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See ADDABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused, incomprehensible remainder of endless, addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop, or boundary. Locke.

ADDIBI'LITY. n. s. [from addible.] The possibility of being added.

This endless addition, or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

ADDICE. n. s. [for which we corruptly speak and write adze, from abere, Sax. an axe.]

The addice hath its blade made thin and somewhat arching. As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a basil on its inside to its outer edge. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To ADDI'CT. v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good sense; which is rarely used.

Ye know the house of Stephanus, that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

2. It is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, he addicted himself to vice.

3. To devote one's self to any person, party, or persuasion. A Latinism.

I am neither author or factor of any sect: I will have no man addict himself to me; but if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's. Ben Jonson.

ADDI'CTEDNESS. n. s. [from addicted.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Those know how little I have remitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments. Boyle.

ADDI'CTION. n. s. [addictio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.

2. The state of being devoted.

It is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shakespeare.

ADDITAMENT. n. s. [additamentum, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fusion so as the enquirer must be upon the calcination, and the additament, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In a palace there is first the case or fabrick, or moles of the structure itself; and, besides that, there are certain additaments that contribute to its ornament and use; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADDI'TION. n. s. [from add.]

1. The act of adding one thing to another; opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures, can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his apostles have designed. Hammond.

Some such resemblances, methinks, I find
Of our last evening's talk, in this thy dream,
But with addition strange! Milton.

The abolishing of villanage, together with the custom permitted among the nobles, of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons. Swift.

3. In arithmetick.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind together into one sum or total. Cocker's Arithmetick.

4. In law. A title given to a man over and above his christian name and surname, shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowell.

Only retain
The name, and all th' additions to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. Shakesp. King Lear.

From this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th' applauſe and clamour of the hoſt,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

There aroſe new diſputes upon the perſons named by the king, or rather againſt the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

ADDI'TIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and ſet right, it may be kept ſo, without any conſiderable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greateſt wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in ſo good an underſtanding, and celebrated one another with ſo much generoſity, that each of them receives an additional luſtre from his cotemporaries. Addiſon.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is ſuppoſed to be powerful: and do, withal, afford us ſeveral other additional proofs, of great force and clearneſs. Attenbury.

ADDI'TIONAL. n. ſ. Additament; ſomething added. Not in uſe.

May be ſome little additional, may further the incorporation. Bacon.

A'DDITORY. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger ſhare of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to ſerve ſome good end or purpoſe. Arbuthnot.

A'DDLE. adj. [from abel, a diſeaſe, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius; perhaps from ydel, idle, barren, untruitful.] Originally applied to eggs, and ſignifying ſuch as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,
That carries eggs too freſh or addle;
And ſtill at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble rout beſtows. Hudibras.

After much ſolitarineſs, faſting, or long ſickneſs, their brains were addle, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addle:
And all the reſt is purely from this noddle. Dryden

To A'DDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is alſo evidenced in eggs, whereof the ſound ones ſink, and ſuch as are addled ſwim; as do alſo thoſe that are termed hyponemiæ, or wind-eggs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'DDLE. v. n. To grow; to increaſe. Obſolete.

Where ivy embraceth the tree very ſore,
Kill ivy, elſe tree will addle no more. Tuſſer's Huſbandry.

A'DDLE-PATED. adj. Having addled brains. See ADDLE.

Poor ſlaves in metre, dull and addle-pated,
Who rhyme below even David's pſalms tranſlated. Dryden.

To ADDRE'SS. v. a. [addreſſer, Fr. from dereçar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's ſelf to enter upon any action; as, he addreſſed himſelf to the work. It has to before the thing.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit ſad,
Himſelf addreſt to that adventure hard. Fairy Queen

It lifted up its head, and did addreſs
Itſelf to motion, like as it would ſpeak. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Addreſs'd himſelf on foot to ſingle fight. Dryden.

2. To get ready; to put in a ſtate for immediate uſe.

They fell directly on the Engliſh battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick addreſſed his men to take the flank. Huyward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day
Men of great worth reſorted to this foreſt,
Addreſs'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct purpoſely to take
His brother here. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

To-night in Harfleur we will be your gueſt,
To-morrow for the march we are addreſt. Shakeſpeare.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of conſtruction.

4. Sometimes without a propoſition.

To ſuch I would addreſs with this moſt affectionate petition. Decay of Piety.

Among the crowd, but far above the reſt,
Young Turnus to the beauteous maid addreſt. Dryden.

Are not your orders to addreſs the ſenate? Addiſon.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addreſſing to Pollio, his great patron, and himſelf no vulgar poet, he began to aſſert his native character, which is ſublimity. Dryden.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addreſſed himſelf to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accuſative of the matter of the addreſs, which may be the nominative to the paſſive.

The young hero had addreſſed his prayers to him for his aſſiſtance. Dryden.

The prince himſelf, with awful dread poſſeſs'd,
His vows to great Apollo thus addreſt. Dryden.

His ſuit was common; but, above the reſt,
To both the brother-princes thus addreſt. Dryden.

8. To addreſs [in law] is to apply to the king in form.

The repreſentatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, addreſs'd the king to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRE'SS. n. ſ. [addreſſe. Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of perſuaſion; petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half confeſs'd and half conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's ſoft addreſs,
That, as the wound, the paſſion might increaſe. Prior.

Moſt of the perſons, to whom theſe addreſſes are made, are not wiſe and ſkilful judges, but are influenced by their own ſinful appetites and paſſions. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtſhip.

They often have reveal'd their paſſion to me:
But, tell me, whoſe addreſs thou favour'ſt moſt;
I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Addiſon.

A gentleman, whom, I am ſure, you yourſelf would have approved, made his addreſſes to me. Addiſon.

3. Manner of addreſſing another; as, we ſay, a man of an happy or a pleaſing addreſs; a man of an awkward addreſs.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable inſtances from my own obſervation, of events imputed to the profound ſkill and addreſs of a miniſter, which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakneſs, humour, paſſion, or pride, or at beſt but the natural courſe of things left to themſelves. Swift.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a ſenſe chiefly mercantile.

ADDRE'SSER. n. ſ. [from addreſs.] The perſon that addreſſes or petitions.

ADDU'CENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.] A word applied to thoſe muſcles that bring forward, cloſe, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are annexed. Quincy.

To ADDU'LCE. v. a. [addoucir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To ſweeten: a word not now in uſe.

Thus did the French embaſſadors, with great ſhew of their king's affection, and many ſugared words, ſeek to addulce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

A'DELING. n. ſ. [from æbel, Sax. illuſtrious.] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: king Edward the Confeſſor, being without iſſue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him adeling. Cowell.

ADENO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἀδὴν and γράφω, Gr.] A treatiſe of the glands.

ADE'MPTION. n. ſ. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation. Dict.

ADE'PT. n. ſ. [from aeptus, Lat. that is, adeptus artem.] He that is completely ſkilled in all the ſecrets of his art. It is, in its original ſignification, appropriated to the chymiſts, but is now extended to other artiſts.

The preſervation of charity is only to true adepts. Pope.

ADI'PT. adj. Skilful; throughly verſed.

If there be any truth in thoſe ſtories we are told of, I am apt to think, that many other arcana, than are matters of extremely portentous ſignificancy. Boyle.

A'DEQUATE. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correſpondent to, ſo as to bear an exact reſemblance or proportion. It is uſed generally in a figurative ſenſe, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death ſeems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage, but a neceſſary and unavoidable coffin ſtrikes paleneſs into the ſtouteſt heart. Harvey on Conſumptions.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and ſufficient to compaſs their reſpective ends. South.

All our ſimple ideas are adequate; becauſe, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce ſuch ſenſations in us, they cannot but be correſpondent and adequate to thoſe powers. Locke.

Thoſe are ad quare ideas, which perfectly repreſent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial, or incomplete, repreſentation of thoſe archetypes to which they are referred. Watts's Logick.

A'DEQUATELY. adv. [from adequate.]

1. In an adequate manner; with juſtneſs of repreſentation; with exactneſs of proportion.

Gratitude conſiſts adequately in theſe two things: firſt, that it is a debt; and, ſecondly, that it is ſuch a debt as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is uſed with the particle to.

Piety is the neceſſary Chriſtian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniſcience and ſpirituality of that infinite Deity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. To stick, in a figurative sense; to be consistent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance— Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, person, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
And sure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is laudable, when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour. Boyle

ADHE'RENCE. n. s. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering, or sticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative sense, fixedness of mind; steadiness; fidelity.

The firm adherence of the Jews to their religion is more remarkable than their dispersion; considering it as persecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Addison.

A constant adherence to one sort of diet may have bad effects on any constitution.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Plain good sense, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual than those arts, which are contemptuously called the spirit of opposition. Swift.

ADHE'RENCY. n. s. [The same with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That which adheres.

We have a inactive adherency of vexation.
Decay of Piety.

ADHE'RENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Close to the cliff with both his hands he clung,
And stuck adherent, as suspended hung. Pope.

2. United with.

Modes are held to be inherent or adherent, that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes are those arising from the joining of some accidental inherence to the chief subject, which yet may be separated from it; so when a bowl is white, or a boy is clothed, colour are adherent modes for the white and the clothes are not inseparable which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy. Watts's Logick.

ADHE'RENT. n. s. [from adhere.]

1. The person that adheres; one that supports the cause, or follows the fortune of another; a follower, a partisan.

Princes owe protection to their subjects and adherents, when worthy occasion shall require it. Raleigh.

A new war must be undertaken upon the advice of those, who by reason of their partisans and adherents, were to be subservient to it. Swift.

2. Any thing outwardly belonging to a person.

When they cannot shake the main sort, they must try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his discretion, his humour, his carriage, and his extrinsick adherents. Government of the Tongue.

ADHE'RER. n. s. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender consciences, but, at the same time, a firm adherer to the established church. Swift.

ADHE'SION. n. s. [adhæsio, Lat.]

1. The act or state of sticking to something. Adhesion is generally used in the natural, and adherence in the metaphorical sense: as, the adhesion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently shaped for adhesion, stick to one another, as well as stick to this spirit? Boyle.

The rest consisting wholly in the sensible configuration, as smooth and rough; or else more, or less, firm adhesion of the parts, as hard and soft, tough and brittle, are obvious. Locke.

—— Prove that all things, on occasion,
Love union, and desire adhesion. Prior.

2. It is sometimes taken, like adherence, figuratively, for firmness in an opinion, or steadiness in a practice.

The same want of sincerity, the same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be equally a reason for their rejecting any proof whatsoever. Atterbury.

ADHE'SIVE. adj. [from adhesion.] Sticking; tenacious.

It flow, yet sure, adhesive to the tract,
Hot steaming up. Thomson.

To ADHI'BIT. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make use of.

Salt, a necessary ingredient in all sacrifices, was adhibited and required in this view only as an emblem of purification.
President Forbes's Letter to a Bishop.

ADHIBI'TION. n. s. [from adhibit.] Application; use. Dict.

ADJA'CENCY. n. s. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The state of lying close to another thing.

2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Because the Cape hath sea on both sides near it, and other lands, remote as it were, equidistant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not distracted by the vicinity of adjacencies. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJA'CENT. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying near or close; bordering upon something.

It may corrupt within itself, although no part of it issue into the body adjacent. Bacon.

Uniform pellucid mediums, such as water, have no sensible reflection but in their external superficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different density. Newton.

ADJA'CENT. n. s. That which lies next another.

The sense of the author goes visibly in its own train, and the words receiving a determined sense from their companions and adjacents, will not come to give countenance and colour to what must be supposed at any rate. Locke.

ADIAPHOROUS. adj. [ἀδιάφορος, Gr.] Neutral; particularly used of some spirits and salts, which are neither of an acid or alkaline nature. Quincy.

The adiaphorous spirit may be obtained, by distilling the liquor that is assolved by woods and drugs without bodies. Boyle.

ADIA'PHORY. n. s. [ἀδιαφορία, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

To ADJE'CT. v. a. [adjicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJE'CTION. n. s. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting, or adding.

2. The thing adjected, or added.

That unto every pound of sulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quicksilver; or unto every pound of pepper, one ounce of sal ammoniac, will much intend the force, and consequently the report, I find no verity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADJECTI'TIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the rest.

A'DJECTIVE. n. s. [adjectivum, Lat.] A word added to a noun, to signify the addition or separation of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives, because, in speech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their signification, or intimate the manner of existence in the things signified thereby. Clarke's Latin Gram.

All the versification of Claudian is included within the compass of four or five lines; perpetually closing his sense at the end of a verse, and that verse commonly which they call golden, or two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them, to keep the peace. Dryden.

A'DJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU'. adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care, but now used, in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell.

Ne gave him leave to bid that aged sire
Adieu, but nimbly ran her wonted course.
Fairy Queen.

Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them.
Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

While now I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear;
Left yet my half-clos'd eye may view
On earth an object worth its care. Prior.

To ADJO'IN. v. a. [adjoendre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.]

1. To join to; to unite to; to put to.

As one who long in populous city pent
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton.

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places, and superadded to a regular treatise. Watts.

2. To fasten by a joint or juncture.

As a massy wheel
Fixt on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoined. Shakespeare.

To ADJO'IN. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lie next, so as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane, th' assembled Greeks express'd,
And hunting of the Caledonian beast. Dryden.

In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once, as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed. Locke.

To ADJOURN. v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term used in juridical proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness,
That we adjourn this court to further day.
Shakespeare.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Raym.

2. To

2. To put off; to defer; to let ſtay to a future time.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why haſt thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd. Shakeſp. Cymb.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught:
Enjoy the preſent hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpoſe, I ſhall adjourn the conſideration of it to another occaſion. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

ADJO'URNMENT. n. ſ. [adjournement, Fr.]

1. An aſſignment of a day, or a putting off till another day.

Adjournment in eyre, an appointment of a day, when the juſtices in eyre mean to ſit again. Cowell.

2. Delay; procraſtination; diſmiſſion to a future time.

We will and we will not, and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run out lives out in adjournments from time to time, out of a fantaſtical levity that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Eſtrange.

A'DIPOUS. adj. [adipoſus, Lat.] Fat. Dict.

A'DIT. n. ſ. [aditus, Lat.] A paſſage for the conveyance of water under ground; a paſſage under ground in general; a term among the minemen.

For conveying away the water, they ſtand in aid of ſundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels driven by a ſtream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew.

The delfs would be ſo flown with waters (it being impoſſible to make any adits or troughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could ſuffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

ADI'TION. n. ſ. [from adeo, aditum, Lat.] The act of going to another. Dict.

To ADJU'DGE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted to one of the parties by a judicial ſentence; with the particle to before the perſon.

The way of diſputing in the ſchools is by inſiſting on one topical argument; by the ſucceſs of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent, or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome,
Cæſar and Pompey, on Pharſalia's plains,
Where ſtern Bellona, with one final ſtroke,
Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one. Philips.

2. To ſentence, or condemn to a puniſhment; with to before the thing.

But though thou art adjudged to the death;
Yet I will favour thee in what I can. Shakeſp.

1. The act of adjuring, or propoſing an oath to another.

2. The form of oath propoſed to another.

When theſe learned men ſaw ſo keen and fierce a cure, the devil failed, the oracles put to ſilence, the daemons and evil ſpirits forced to confeſs themſelves no gods, by perſons, who only made uſe of prayer and adjuration in the name of their crucified Saviour, how could they doubt of their Saviour's power on the like occaſions? Addiſon on the Chriſtian Religion.

To ADJU'RE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impoſe an oath upon another, preſcribing the form in which he ſhall ſwear.

Thou know'ſt, the magiſtrates
And princes of my country came in perſon,
Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty,
And of religion, pleas'd how juſt it was,
How honourable. Milton.

Ye lamps of heaven! he ſaid, and lifted high
His hands now free, thou venerable ſky!
Ye ſacred altars! from whoſe flames I fled,
Be all of you adjured. Dryden.

To ADJU'ST. v. a. [adjuſter, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to ſettle in the right form.

Your Lordſhip removes all our difficulties, and ſupplies all our wants, better than the moſt viſionary projector can adjuſt his ſchemes. Swift.

2. To reduce to the true ſtate or ſtandard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the moſt part, want ſtandards in nature, which may teſtify and adjuſt their ſignification, therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accompliſhment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Joſephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the hiſtorian had been a Chriſtian, and that he had nothing elſe in view, but to adjuſt the event to the prediction. Addiſon.

ADJU'STMENT. n. ſ. [adjuſtement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; ſettlement.

The further and clearer adjuſtment of this affair, I am conſtrained to adjourn to the larger treatiſe. Woodward.

2. The ſtate of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an inſtrument made to ſhew the hour: but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the ſeveral parts of it, together with the various connections and adjuſtments of each part. Watts's Logick.

A'DJUTANT. n. ſ. A petty officer, whoſe duty is to aſſiſt the major, by diſtributing the pay, and overſeeing the puniſhment, of the common men.

To ADJU'TE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur: a word not now in uſe.

For there be
Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company;

They have the ſame effects in medicine, when inwardly adminiſtrated to animal bodies.
Woodward.

ADMINISTRA'TION. n. ſ. [adminiſtratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adminiſtering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the public affairs; diſpenſing the laws.

I then did uſe the perſon of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in the adminiſtration of his law,
While I was buſy for the commonwealth,
Your highneſs pleaſed to forget my place.
Shakeſpeare.

In the ſhort time of his adminiſtration, he ſhone ſo powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Ruſſian ſummer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate. Dryden.

2. The active or executive part of government.

It may paſs for a maxim in ſtate, that the adminiſtration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legiſlature in too many. Swift.

3. Collectively, thoſe to whom the care of public affairs is committed; as, the adminiſtration has been oppoſed in parliament.

4. Diſtribution; exhibition; diſpenſation.

There is, in ſacraments, to be obſerved their force, and their form of adminiſtration. Hooker.

By the univerſal adminiſtration of grace, begun by our bleſſed Saviour, enlarged by his apoſtles, carried on by their immediate ſucceſſors, and to be completed by the reſt to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened.
Sprat's Sermons.

ADMI'NISTRATIVE. adj. [from adminiſtrate.] That which adminiſters; that by which any one adminiſters.

ADMINISTRA'TOR. n. ſ. [adminiſtrator, Lat.]

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praiſe, that he will not hurt.
Sidney.

God was with them in all their afflictions, and, at length, by working their admirable deliverance, did teſtify that they ſerved him not in vain.
Hooker.

What admirable things occur in the remains of ſeveral other philoſophers! Short, I confeſs, of the rules of chriſtianity, but generally above the lives of chriſtians. South's Sermons.

You can at moſt
To an indifferent lover's praiſe pretend:
But you would ſpoil an admirable friend. Dryden.

A'DMIRABLENESS. n. ſ. [from admirable.] The quality of being admirable; the power of raiſing wonder.

A'DMIRABLY. adv. [from admirable.] So as to raiſe wonder; in an admirable manner.

The theatre is the moſt ſpacious of any I ever ſaw, and ſo admirably well contrived, that, from the very depth of the ſtage, the loweſt ſound may be heard diſtinctly to the fartheſt part of the audience, as in a whiſpering place; and yet, raiſe your voice as high as you pleaſe, there is nothing like an echo to cauſe the leaſt confuſion. Addiſon.

A'DMIRAL. n. ſ. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magiſtrate that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all cauſes, as well civil as criminal, belonging to the ſea. Cowell.

ADMIRA'TION. n. ſ. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indu'd with human voice, and human ſenſe,
Reaſoning to admiration. Milton.

The paſſions always move, and therefore, conſequently, pleaſe; for, without motion, there can be no delight: which cannot be conſidered, but as an active paſſion. When we view thoſe elevated ideas of nature, the reſult of that view is admiration, which is always the cauſe of pleaſure.
Dryden.

There is a pleaſure in admiration, and this is that which properly cauſeth admiration, when we diſcover a great deal in an object which we underſtand to be excellent; and yet we ſee, we know not how much more beyond that, which our underſtandings cannot fully reach and comprehend.
Tillotſon.

2. It is taken ſometimes in a bad ſenſe, though generally in a good.

Your boldneſs I with admiration ſee;
What hope had you to gain a queen like me?
Becauſe a hero toſs'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a ſecond prey? Dryden.

To ADMI'RE. v. a. [admiro, Lat. admirer, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder: generally in a good ſenſe.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed ſtupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philoſophic paſſion truly admires and adores the ſupreme efficient.
Glanville.

2. It is ſometimes uſed, in more familiar ſpeech, for to regard with love.

3. It is uſed, but rarely, in an ill ſenſe:

You have diſplac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting
With moſt admir'd diſorder. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

To ADMI'RE. v. n. To wonder; ſometimes with the particle at.

The eye is already ſo perfect, that I believe the reaſon of a man would eaſily have reſted here, and admir'd at his own contrivance. Ray on the Creation.

ADMI'RER. n. ſ. [from admire.]

1. The perſon that wonders, or regards with admiration.

Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained ſo great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Addiſon.

Who moſt to ſhun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope.

2. In common ſpeech, a lover.

ADMI'RINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately ſpoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.

We may yet further admiringly obſerve, that men uſually give freeſt where they have not given before. Boyle.

ADMI'SSIBLE. adj. [admitto, admiſſum, Lat.] That which may be admitted.

Suppoſe that this ſuppoſition were admiſſible, yet this would not any way be inconſiſtent with the eternity of the divine nature and eſſence.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADMI'SSION. n. ſ. [admiſſio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was alſo enacted that charitable law, for the admiſſion of poor ſuitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to ſue. Bacon's Henry VII.

By means of our ſolitary ſituation, and our rare admiſſion of ſtrangers, we know moſt part of the habitable world, and are ourſelves unknown.
Bacon's New Atalantis

2. The ſtate of being admitted.

My father ſaw you ill deſigns purſue;
And my admiſſion ſhow'd his fear of you. Dryden.

God

God did then entertain man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradise, or a more intimate admission to himself. South's Sermons.

Our king descends from Jove:
And hither are we come by his command,
To crave admission in your happy land. Dryden.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted.

All springs have some degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longest and severest frosts; especially those, where there is such a site and disposition of the strata as gives free and easy admission to this heat. Woodward's Natural History.

4. [In the ecclesiastical law.] It is, when the patron presents a clerk to a church that is vacant, and the bishop, upon examination, admits and allows of such clerk to be fitly qualified, by saying, Admitto te habilem. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Mirth, admit me of thy crew. Milton.
Does not one table Bavius still admit? Pope.

2. To suffer to enter upon an office; in which sense the phrase of admission into a college, &c. is used.

The treasurer found it no hard matter so far to terrify him, that, for the king's service, as was pretended, he admitted, for a six-clerk, a person recommended by him. Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or position.

Suppose no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that by no force thou may'st be won,
Admit no steel can hurt or wound thy side,
And be it heav'n hath thee such favour done.
Fairfax.

This argument is like to have the less effect on me, seeing I cannot easily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow, or grant in general; sometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raised above the life, that leads you insensibly from your own principles to mine. Dryden.

ADMI'TTABLE. adj. [from admit.] The person or thing which may be admitted.

Because they have not a bladder like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admittable, a fallacy that needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown.

The clerk, who is presented, ought to prove to the bishop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwise, the bishop is not bound to admit him; for, as the law then stood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADMI'TTANCE. n. s. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity. Hooker.

As to the admittance of the weighty elastic parts of the air into the blood, through the coats of the vessels, it seems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What
If I do line one of their hands?—'tis gold
Which buys admittance. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, is the readiest way to gain admittance into the house. South's Sermons.

There's no [illegible] Bartran; he desires
Admittance to [illegible], and cries aloud,
This day shall e[illegible] fears. Dryden.

There are some ideas which have admittance only through one sense, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Custom, or prerogative, of being admitted to great persons: a sense now out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakespeare.

4. Concession of a position.

Nor could the Pythagorean give easy admittance thereto; for, holding that separate souls successively supplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raising of souls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ADMI'X. v. a. [admisceo, Lat.] To mingle with something else.

ADMI'XTION. n. s. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by strong waters, or by admixtion of salt, sulphur, and mercury. Bacon.

The elements are no where pure in these lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, sure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville.

There is no way to make a strong and vigorous powder of saltpetre, without the admixtion of sulphur. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADMI'XTURE. n. s. [from admix.] The body mingled with another; perhaps sometimes the act of mingling.

Whatever acrimony, or amaritude, at any time redounds in it, must be derived from the admixture of another sharp bitter substance. Harvey on Consumptions.

A mass which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere simple earth, shall, to the smell or taste, discover a plentiful admixture of sulphur, alum, or some other mineral. Woodward's Natural History.

To ADMO'NISH. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.] To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counsel against wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty; with the particle of, or against, which is more rare; or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity. Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish, and before them set
The paths of righteousness. Milton.

But when he was admonished by his subject to defend, he came down, gently circling in the air, and singing, to the ground. Dryden.

ADMO'NISHER. n. s. [from admonish.] The person that admonishes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admonisher; a court-satirist fit for the gentle times of Augustus. Dryden.

ADMO'NISHMENT. n. s. [from admonish.] Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often used.

But yet be wary in the studious care.—
—Thy grave admonishments prevail with me.
Shakespeare's Henry V. p. 1.

To th' infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks, and his admonishment
Receive, with solemn purpose to observe
Immutably his sovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton.

ADMONI'TION. n. s. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counsel; gentle reproof.

They must give our teachers leave, for the saving of souls, to intermingle sometimes with other more necessary things, admonition concerning these not unnecessary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again; so that, upon a second and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unseasonable drowsiness. South's Sermons.

ADMONI'TIONER. n. s. [from admonition.] A liberal dispenser of admonition; a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did seem at first to like no prescript form of prayer at all, but thought it the best that their minister should always be left at liberty to pray, as his own discretion did serve, their defender, and his associates, have hitherto proposed to the world a form as themselves did like. Hooker.

ADMO'NITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That which admonishes.

The sentence of reason is either mandatory, shewing what must be done; or else permissive, declaring only what may be done; or, thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the most convenient for us to do. Hooker.

ADMURMURA'TION. n. s. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring, or whispering to another. Dict.

To ADMO'VE. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another. A word not in use.

If, unto the powder of loadstone or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadstone, the powders, or small divisions, will erect and conform themselves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'. n. s. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon prisoner, whom, with much ado, he keepeth alive, the Helots being villanously cruel. Sidney.

They moved, and in the end persuaded, with much ado, the people to bind themselves by solemn oath. Hooker.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir J. Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;
Not suffering all his eyes repose to take. Dryden.

2. Bustle; tumult; business; sometimes with the particle about.

Let's follow, to see the end of this ado. Shakesp.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatness of its power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and show of business, than the affair is worth: in this sense it is of late generally used.

I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus. Shakesp. Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two—
It may be thought we held him carelessly,
Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakesp.

Come, says Puss, without any more ado, 'tis time to go to breakfast; cats don't live upon dialogues. L'Estrange.

ADOLE'SCENCE. } n. s. [adolescentia, Lat.]
ADOLE'SCENCY. } The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty; more largely, that part of life in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature, if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescency, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescence, before they can either themselves assist assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley.

To ADO'PT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

Were none of all my adopted sisters left;
Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;
None by an uncle's or a grandame's side,
Yet I could some adopted heir provide. Dryden.

2. To place any person or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether, adopted to some neighb'ring star,
Thou roll'st above us in thy wand'ring race,
Or, in procession fix'd and regular,
Mov'st with the heav'n's majestic pace;
Or call'd to more celestial lifes,
Thou tread'st, with sylphs, the vast abyss.
Dryden.

We are fallen in an age from the felicitation of our natural adoption to fire, but a constant preservation of an unearthly, out of that fire, which natural heat, or night's habit, have helped up. Locke.

ADO'PTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Myself, and all the wonders change thereat,
By sea, through air, and earth. Shakspeare.

ADO'PTER. n. s. [from adopt.] He that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADO'PTION. n. s. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not native.

2. The state of being adopted.

My good lord Lieutenant, my reputation gnawed at, and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me this wrong.
Shakspeare.

See purpose,
With the best speed your duty can devise,
To add more virtues to well-won honour
In his own grace to the crown. Shakspeare.

In every act of our Christian worship, we are taught to call upon him as the God, and Father of our Lord, and by virtue of that adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers's Sermons.

ADO'PTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his son.

It is impossible an elective monarch should be to such a subject as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father to have so full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his son.

An adopted son cannot claim by adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADO'RABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That which ought to be adored; that which is worthy of divine honours.

On these two, the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, says the adorable Author of Christianity; and the Apostle says, the end of the law is charity. Cheyne.

ADO'RABLENESS. n. s. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthiness of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORA'TION. n. s. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church, or publick society, of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker.

It is possible to suppose, that those who believe a supreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stillingfleet.

2. Homage paid to persons in high place or esteem.

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth:
What is thy soul, O adoration!
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing.
What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? Shakspeare's Henry V.

To ADO'RE. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore,
And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, No 57

Make future times thy equal act adore,
And be what brave Ormedes was before.
Pope's Odyssey.

ADO'REMENT. n. s. [from adore.] Adoration; worship: a word scarcely used.

The ancients or elder times adjoined them as companions with the savage and such oblique idolatries, and won the credulous to the bread and downright adorement of cats, lizards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'RER. n. s. [from adore.]

1. He that adores; a worshipper; a term generally used in a low sense; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crowd speak mighty Venus near;
I, her adorer, too devoutly stand
Fall on the utmost margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worshipper; in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissemble, or to suffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he resolved not to do. Clarendon.

To ADO'RN. v. a. [adorno, Latin.]

1. To dress; to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornament, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isaiah, lxi. 10

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,
That shews more cost than art;
Jewels at nose and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To fit out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or statues of the inventors of things useful to human life. Evelyn.

3. To embellish with oratory or elegance of language.

This will supply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and defended, in their discourse. Sprat.

Thousands there are in darker fame that dwell,
Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn,
For, tho' unknown to me, they sure fought well.
Dryden.

ADO'RN. adj. [from the verb.] Adorned; decorated: a word peculiar to Milton.

She'll to realities yield all her shows,
Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.

ADO'RNMENT. n. s. [from adorn.] Ornament; embellishment; elegance: not now in use.

This attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confused; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh's History of the World.

She held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

ADO'WN. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice did she sink adown in deadly sound,
And thrice he her revived with busy pain.
Fairy Queen.

ADO'WN. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher situation towards a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryden.

ADRE'AD. adv. [from a and dread; as, aside, athirst, asleep.] In a state of fear; frighted; terrified: now obsolete.

And thinking to make all men adread to such a one an enemy, who would not spare, nor fear to kill so great a prince. Sidney.

ADRI'FT. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random; as any impulse may drive.

Then, shall this mount
Of paradise, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton.

It seem'd a corps adrift to distant sight;
But at a distance who could judge aright? Dryden.

The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from useless unattentive roving. Locke on Education.

ADROIT. adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; skilful.

An adroit stout fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time. Jarvis's Don Quixote.

ADROI'TNESS. n. s. [from adroit.] Dexterity; readiness; activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, seem yet completely naturalized

ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst; thirsty; in want of drink.

He could not say of them, that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher; and would rather be thought a malcontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spectator.

ADSCITI'TIOUS. adj. [adscititius, Lat.] That which is taken in to complete something else, though originally extrinsick; supplemental; additional.

ADSTRI'CTION. n. s. [adstrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVA'NCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

1. To bring forward, in the local sense.

Now morn her rosy steps in th' eastern clime
Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl.
Milton.

2. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.

He hath been ever confident in his course of advancing me; from a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen; and now he intends to crown my innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

The declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Esther, x. 2.

3. To improve.

What laws can be advised more proper and effectual fectual to advance the nature of man to its higheſt perfection, than theſe precepts of Chriſtianity? Tillotſon.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give luſtre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, ſo the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it. South's Sermons.

5. To forward; to accelerate.

Theſe three laſt were flower than the ordinary Indian wheat of itſelf; and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propoſe; to offer to the publick; to bring to view or notice.

Pheðon I hight, quoth he, and do advance
My anceſtry from famous Coradin. Fairy Queen.

I dare not advance my opinion againſt the judgment of ſo great an author; but I think it fair to leave the deciſion to the publick. Dryden.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the ſpreading notion of the town. Pope.

To ADVA'NCE. v. n.

1. To come forward.

At this the youth, whoſe vent'rous ſoul
No fears of magick art controul,
Advanc'd in open fight. Pernel.

2. To make improvement.

They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and ſwell themſelves with a little articulated air, ſhould not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and diſtinct ideas of thoſe entities. Locke

ADVA'NCE. n. ſ. [from To advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.

All the foot were put into Abington, with a reſolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon

So, like the ſun's advance, your titles ſhow;
Which, as he riſes, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.

In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain thoſe eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the ſmiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Waſh

His genius was ſo low
The ſkill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, though he cannot ſpell, is wiſe
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift

He has deſcribed the unworthy paſſion of the goddeſs Calypſo, and the indecent advances ſhe made to detain him from his own country. Tatler.

That prince applied himſelf firſt to the Church of England, and upon their refuſal to fall in with his meaſure, made the like advances to the Diſſenters. Swift

3. Gradual progreſſion; riſe from one point to another.

Our Saviour raiſed the ruler's daughter, the widow's ſon, and Lazarus; the firſt of theſe, when ſhe had juſt expired; the ſecond, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been ſome time buried. And having, by theſe gradual advances, manifeſted his divine power, he at laſt exerted the higheſt and moſt tranſcendent degree of it; and raiſed himſelf alſo by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own expreſs prediction. Atterbury.

Men of ſtudy and thought, that reaſon right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advance in their diſcoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progreſs towards perfection.

The principle and object of the greateſt importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVA'NCEMENT. n. ſ. [avancement, Fr.]

A face, which ſome time appears to advantage in the full light of day; and which, in a dull complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addiſon.

I have not to nature to advantage dreſs'd,
What not that bolder, but more wed expreſs'd.
Pope.

5. Superior excellence.

A man born with ſuch advantage of conſtitution, that it adulterates not the images of his mind. Glanville.

6. Gain; profit.

For thoſe ſaint, what advantage will it be unto them, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleared from my ſin? Job.

Certain it is, that advantage now ſits in the room of conſcience, and ſteers all.
South's Sermons.

7. Overplus; ſomething more than the mere lawful gain.

We owe thee much; within this wall of fleſh
There is a ſoul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love.
Shakeſpeare.

You ſaid, you neither lend nor borrow
Upon advantage. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

8. Preponderation on one ſide of the compariſon.

Much more ſhould the conſideration of this pattern arm us with patience againſt ordinary calamities; eſpecially if we conſider his example with this advantage, that though his ſufferings were wholly undeſerved, and nor for himſelf but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotſon.

To ADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I ſet down to my lady: it ſhall advantage more than ever the bearing of letter did. Shakeſpeare.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way,
Rather more honour left, and more eſteem;
Me nought advantag'd, miſſing what I aim'd.
Milton.

The great buſineſs of the ſenſes being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wiſely ordered by nature, that pain ſhould accompany the reception of ſeveral ſorts. Locke.

We ſhould have purſued ſome other way, more effectual, for diſtreſſing the common enemy, and advantaging ourſelves. Swift.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground to.

Gumble's Life of Monſieur.

ADVA'NTAGEABLE. adj. [from advantage.] Profitable; convenient; gainful.

As it is advantageable to a phyſician to be converſed in the cure of the laſty, ſo is it for a commander to ſuppreſs a faction which has poiſoned the ſtate. Sir J. Hayward.

ADVA'NTAGED. adj. [from To advantage.] Poſſeſſed of advantages; commodiouſly ſituated or diſpoſed.

In the moſt advantaged temper, this ſhip-buſineſs is but compound ware, wherein the moſt of men lie under diſadvantages, which each one muſt bear for himſelf. Graunt.

ADVA'NTAGE-GROUND. n. ſ. Ground that gives ſuperiority, and opportunities of annoyance or reſiſtance.

This excellent man, who ſtood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbiſhoprick, provoked or unprovoked the envy, and reproach, and malice, of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; uſeful; opportune; convenient.

The time of ſickneſs, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a ſeaſon of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of bepenting or increaſing ſpiritual life. Hammond.

Hee perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd
By ſudden aſſault, either with hell-fire
To waſte his whole creation; or poſſeſs
All as our own. Milton.

2. It is uſed with relation to perſons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himſelf in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himſelf, to the end that he may cultivate thoſe talents which make his genius. Dryden.

ADVE'NIENT. adj. [advenions, Lat.] Advening; coming from outward causes; superadded.

Being thus derived from truth in themselves, they are yet rather corrupted by our advenient opinions, and those are daily wicked and criminally taken up. Lewis's Virgil Parall.

It is to be got the forty-eighth part from the body, not exactly advenient to the gross compound light, and of the word hath been spoken. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

A'DVENT. n. s. [from advenio; that is, adventum Redemptoris.] The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming, that is, the coming of our Saviour; which is made the subject of our devotion during the four weeks before Christmas. Common Prayer.

ADVE'NTIAL. adj. [from advenio, adventum.] Adventitious; that which is extrinsically added, that which comes from outward causes; a word scarcely in use.

As for the progenie heat, it is thus far true, that, if the proportion of the advential heat to growth put commonly to the natural heat or spirit of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or mortal wasting. Bacon.

ADVENTI'TIOUS. adj. [adventitius, Lat.] That which advenes; accidental; supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent.

Defects of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet real change of colour, from whatsoever cause they proceed, may be properly taken in. Boyle.

If his blood boil, and th' adventitious fire
Raised by high meats, and higher wines, require
To temper and allay the burning heat;
Waters are brought, which by decoction get
New coolness. Dryden.

In the gem-kind, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward.

ADVE'NTIVE. n. s. [from advenio, Latin.] The thing or person that comes from without: a word not now in use.

That the natives be not so many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

ADVE'NTUAL. adj. [from advent.] Relating to the season of advent.

I do also daily use one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons. Bishop Saunderson.

ADVE'NTURE. n. s. [French.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

The general summoned three castles; one desperate of succour, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded; but two stood upon their adventure. Hayward.

2. In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures; [à l' adventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational scheme.

Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected; many scarce knowing their enemies from their friends. Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events; an enterprise, in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd to try
My fate, or, taking my fair adventure, die. Dryden.

4. This noun, with all its derivatives, is frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance; to dare.

Be not angry,
Most mighty princes, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report. Shakespeare.

The Lord had delivered the woman into which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, for the hot and tender her. Deut. xxviii. 56.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. a. To put into the power of chance.

I have father'd sight for you, and adventured life to you, and delivered you out of the land of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himself.

ADVE'NTURER. n. s. [adventurier, Fr.] He that seeks occasions of hazard; he that puts himself in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, indeed,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone. Spenser.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other voluntaries, who came to seek their fortunes. Sir J. Davies.

He intended to hazard his own person, that so the more noble he might win adventurers, who else were like to be less forward. Bacon.

Had it not been for the Irish, which the civil war drew over, and a few soldiers forced into Ireland had, by the last war, and plague, been left destitute. Temple.

Their wealthy trade from pirates' rapine free,
Our merchants shall no more adventurers be. Dryden.

ADVE'NTURESOME. adj. [from adventure.] The same with adventurous: a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVE'NTURESOMENESS. n. s. [from adventuresome.] The quality of being adventuresome. Dict.

ADVE'NTUROUS. adj. [adventureux, Fr.]

1. He that is inclined to adventures; and, consequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who oftner drew his sword, and always for the right. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, that which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream. Addison.

ADVE'NTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurous.] After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. Shakespeare's Henry V.

A'DVERB. n. s. [adverbium, Lat.] A word joined to a verb or adjective, and solely applied to the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as, of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuously.

ADVE'RBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.] That which has the quality or structure of an adverb.

ADVE'RBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I should think alta was joined adverbially with nocte, did Virgil make use of so equivocal a phrase. Addison.

ADVE'RSABLE. adj. [from adverse.] Contrary to; opposite to. Dict.

ADVERSARIA. n. s. [Lat. A book, as it should seem, in which Debtor and Creditor were set in opposition.] A common-place; a book to note in.

These parchments are supposed to have been St. Paul's adversaria. Bull's Sermons.

A'DVERSARY. n. s. [adversaire, Fr. adversarius, Lat.] An opponent; antagonist; enemy: generally applied to those that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as, controvertists or litigants: sometimes to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profession of enmity; as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary
I come to cope. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Those rites and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the self-same now that they were when holy and virtuous men maintained them against profane and deriding adversaries, her own children have in derision. Hooker.

Mean while the adversary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd of highest design,
Puts on swift wings. Milton.

An ill Jury makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison.

ADVE'RSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes some opposition or variety; as, in this sentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adversative conjunction.

A'DVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat.]

In prose it has now the accent on the first syllable: in verse it is accented on the first by Shakespeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden; on the first, by Roscommon.

1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in colliſion.

Was I for this nigh wreckt upon the ſea,
And twice, by adverſe winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime? Shakeſp.

As when two polar winds, blowing adverſe,
Upon the Cronian ſea together drive
Mountains of ice. Milton.

With adverſe blaſt upturns them from the ſouth,
Notus and Afer. Milton.

A cloud of ſmoke envelopes either hoſt,
And all at once the combatants are loſt;
Darkling they join adverſe, and ſhock unſeen;
Courſers with courſers juſtling, men with men.
Dryden.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wiſh or deſire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is oppoſed to proſperous.

What if he hath decreed, that I ſhall firſt
Be try'd in humble ſtate, and things adverſe;
By tribulations, injuries, inſults,
Contempts, and ſcorns, and ſnares, and violence.
Milton.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men, or adverſe fate,
Sunk deep into the gulfs of an afflicted ſtate.
Roſcommon.

3. Perſonally oppoſent; the perſon that counteracts another, or conteſts any thing.

Well ſhe ſaw her father was grown her adverſe party; and yet her fortune ſuch, as ſhe muſt favour her rivals. Sidney.

A'DVERSELY. adv. [from adverſe.] In an adverſe manner; oppoſitely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and ſpend my malice in my breath. If the drink you give me touch my palate adverſely, I make a crooked face at it.
Shakeſpeare.

ADVE'RSITY. n. ſ. [adverſité, Fr.] Affliction; calamity; that is, oppoſition to our wiſhes.

1. The cauſe of our ſorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this ſenſe it may have a plural.

Let me embrace theſe four adverſities,
For wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe.
Shakſpeare's Henry VI.

2. The ſtate of unhappineſs; miſery.

Concerning deliverance riſen from all adverſity, we uſe not to ſay men are in adverſity, whatſoever they feel any ſmall hinderance of their welfare in this world, but when ſome notable affliction or croſs, ſome great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker.

Sweet are the uſes of adverſity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.
Shakſpeare.

A remembrance of the good uſe he had made of proſperity, contributed to ſupport his mind under the heavy weight of adverſity, which now lay upon him. Arbuthnot.

To ADVE'RT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.] To attend to; to regard; to obſerve; with the particle to before the object of regard.

The mind of man being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of ſuch an innumerable number of vaſt bodies, will afford matter of admiration.
Ray on the Creation.

Now to the univerſal whole advert;
The earth regard as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;
Witneſs, ye glorious orbs, which hang around.
Blackmore.

We ſometimes ſay, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVE'RTENCE. n. ſ. [from advert.] Attention to; regard to; conſideration.

Chriſtianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may ſet its foot; allow but a ſober advertence to its propoſals, and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

ADVE'RTENCY. n. ſ. [from advert.] The ſame with advertence. Attention; regard; heedfulneſs.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or elſe you had fled from that text, as from a rock.
Swift.

ADVE'RTENT. adj. [from advert.] Attentive; vigilant; heedful.

This requires choice parts, great attention of mind, ſequeſtration from the importunity of ſecular employment, and a long advertent and deliberate conſidering of conſequents.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ADVERTI'SE. v. a. [advertir, Fr. It is now ſpoken with the accent upon the laſt ſyllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the ſecond.]

1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accuſative of the perſon informed.

The biſhop did require a reſpite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertiſe,
Whether our daughter were legitimate.
Shakeſpeare.

As I by friends am well adviſed,
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shak.

The king was not ſo ſhallow, nor ſo ill adviſed, as not to perceive the intention of the French king. Bacon.

They ſhall adverſe me freely of what they diſlike. Dryden.

2. To inform; to give notice; with of before the ſubject of information.

Perhaps, not conſidering that Solyman was ſtill more offended with the Venetians, and the other Princes declared in death of the Chriſtians, which they adviſed not, forming their leſſe to with all their Land and Sea force.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

They were to advertiſe the chief heads of the diſcourſe of his ſubject, recommended by the ſpeaker. Dryden.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertiſement in the public prints; as, He advertiſed his loſs.

ADVERTI'SEMENT, or ADVE'RTISIMENT. n. ſ. [advertiſement, Fr.]

1. Inſtruction; admonition.

—'Tis all men's office to ſpeak patience
To thoſe, that wring under the load of ſorrow;
But no man's virtue nor ſufficiency,
To be moral, when he ſhall endure
The like himſelf: therefore give me no counſel;
My griefs cry louder than advertiſement.
Shakſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Cyrus was once minded to have put Croeſus to death; but hearing him report the advertiſement of Solon, he ſpared his life.
Abbot's Deſcription of the World.

2. Intelligence; information.

Then, as a cunning prince that uſeth ſpies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But if they make advertiſement of lies,
The prince's counſel all awry do go.
Sir John Davies.

He had received advertiſements, that the parts, which was ſent for his relief, had received ſome bruiſh, which would much retard their march.
Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their ſeveral ſounds, ſerve for many kinds of advertiſements, in military affairs: the bells ſerve to proclaim a fire-fire; and, in ſome places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine ſervice; the hour of the day; day of the month. Holder.

3. Notice of any thing publiſhed in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTI'SER. n. ſ. [advertiſeur, Fr.]

1. He that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper in which advertiſements are publiſhed.

ADVE'RTISING, or ADVERTI'SING. part. adj. [from advertiſe.] Active in giving intelligence; monitory: a word not now in uſe.

As I was then
Advertiſing, and holy to your buſineſs,
Not changing heart with habit, I am ſtill
Attorned at your ſervice. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

To ADVE'SPERATE. v. n. [adveſpero, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

ADVI'CE. n. ſ. [avis, advis, Fr. from adviſo, low Lat.]

1. Counſel; inſtruction: except that inſtruction implies ſuperiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our watch up; and by my ſoul,
Let us impart what we have ſeen to-night
Unto young Hamlet. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

O troubled, weak, and coward as to me!
Without thy pow'rful advice, th' lab'ring boy
To worſe extreme with ſwifter ſteps would run,
Not ſav'd by virtue, yet by circumſtance. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent conſideration: as, he always acts with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified.
So hot a ſpeed with ſuch advice oppoſed,
Such temperate order in ſo fierce a courſe,
Do witneſs example. Spenſer, Faery Queen.

3. Conſultation; deliberation: with the particle with.

Great princes, taking advice with wiſeſt men, with no leſs coſt, ſet them together.
Francis Bacon.

4. Intelligence: as, the merchants received advice of their loſs. This ſeems to be ſomewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVI'CE-BOAT. n. ſ. A veſſel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVI'SABLE. adj. [from adviſe.] Prudent, fit to be adviſed.

Something is expected of a man to whom heaven has been bountiful; and, no doubt, it is beſt and moſt adviſable, for all the reaſons, to comply. Scott's Sermons.

It is not adviſable to run with what ſpeed we can the tendernet toſ ſtation. Jeremy Taylor.

ADVI'SABLENESS. n. ſ. [from adviſable.] The quality of being adviſable, or fit; fitneſs; propriety.

To ADVI'SE. v. a. [aviſer, Fr.]

1. To counſel: with the particle to before the thing adviſed.

If you go forth abroad, be arm'd.——
—— Arm'd, brother!——
——Brother, I adviſe you to the beſt.
Shakſp. King Lear.

I would adviſe all gentlemen to look to their accounts, and not to think it a diſhonour to them. Bacon.

When I conſider the ſcruples and cautions that lie in your way, methinks it looks as if I adviſed you to ſomething which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Locke.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing: often with the particle of before the thing told.

You were adviſed, his fleſh was capable
Of wounds and ſcars; and that his forward ſpirit
Would lift him, where moſt trade of danger rang'd.
Shakeſpeare.

Such discourse bring on,
As may advise him of his happy state;
Happiness in his pow'r, left free to will.
Paradise Lost.

A posting messenger dispatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince.
Dryden's Æneid.

To ADVI'SE. v. n.

1. To consult: with the particle with before the person consulted; as, he advised with his companions.

2. To consider; to deliberate.

Advise if this be worth
Attempting, or to sit in darkness here,
Hatching vain empires.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

ADVI'SED. participial adj. [from advise.]

1. Acting with deliberation and design; prudent; wise.

Let him not appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advised in his answers, than forward to tell stories. Bacon's Essays.

Th' Almighty Father, where he sits
Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heaven secure,
Consulting on the sum of things foreseen,
This tumult, and permitted all, advised.
Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpose; acted with design.

By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, sleep, and move, we set forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose to make it our end, nor any advised determination therein to frame a law.
Hooker, e. i. p. 49.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth, by venturing both,
I oft found both. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

ADVI'SEDLY. adv. [from advised.] Solemnly; heedfully; deliberately; purposely; by design; prudently.

The book, advisedly read and diligently followed but one year at home, would do more, and that more wisely, abroad. Ascham.

Sufficiently I make by moving things even the most remote to be seen, and commend my eye to consider advisedly of those objects moved.
Bacon, Essay xxxix.

Thou shalt find out the highest, and all knowledge that is to be had, and comest advisedly to consider of the works of God. Ecclus.

ADVI'SEDNESS. n. s. [from advised.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those that are in authority, to whose care it belongeth, in prescribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all just advisedness and moderation. Sanderson's Judgment in case of Vows.

ADVI'SEMENT. n. s. [advisement, Fr.]

1. Counsel; information.

More I wote,
What strange adventure do ye now pursue?
Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,
May stead you much. Fairy Queen.

I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils, which seem most hurtful.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both senses, antiquated.

ADVI'SER. n. s. [from advise.] The person that advises, or gives counsel; a counsellor.

Here, free from court-compliances, he walks,
And with himself, his best adviser, talks.
Waller.

They never fail of their most artful and indefatigable address, to silence the impertinent adviser, whose severity awes their excesses.
Rogers's Sermons.

ADULA'TION. n. s. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be sick, great Greatness!
And by thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Shakespeare's Henry V.

They who flattered him most before, mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness, without imputing the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now.
Clarendon.

ADULA'TOR. n. s. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

A'DULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADU'LT. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.

They would appear not able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age, than they were in their minority; as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety.

The earth, by these applauded schools, was fraught
This frugal crop of men and women bred,
Who grown adult, to chance, it seems, enjoin'd,
Each male and female, propagate their kind.
Blackmore.

ADU'LT. n. s. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength; sometimes full grown: a word used chiefly by medicinal writers.

The exfoliation of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur, and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft than those of adults. Sharp's Surgery.

ADU'LTNESS. n. s. [from adult.] The state of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

To ADU'LTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adulter, Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not classical.

To ADU'LTERATE. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adulter, Lat.]

1. To commit adultery.

But that time, oh!
Adulterates hourly with those eyes of Jove.
Shakespeare.

2. To corrupt by some foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common potashes, bought of those that sell it in shops, who are not foolishly knavish as to adulterate them with salt-petre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes. Boyle.

Could a man be composed to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the cracks of his understanding.
Colerus's Sceptic, Scheme, &c. xvi.

The present war has so adulterated our tongue with strange words, that it would be impossible for one of our great-grandfathers to know what his posterity have been doing. Spectator.

ADU'LTERATE. adj. [from To adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am polletes'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the grime of lust;
Being thumpeted by thy contagion.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

——That incestuous, that adulterate beast.
Shakespeare.

2. Corrupted with some foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them.
Government of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and silver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home.
Swift's Miscellanies.

ADU'LTERATENESS. n. s. [from adulterate.] The quality or state of being adulterate, or counterfeit.

ADULTERA'TION. n. s. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture; contamination.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting: but if it be done avowedly, and without disguising, it may be a great saving of the richer metal.
Bacon's Natural History, № 798.

2. The state of being adulterated, or contaminated.

Such translations are like the adulteration of the noblest wines, where scorching of the colour, spirit, and flavour, will remain. Felton on the Classics.

ADU'LTERER. n. s. [adulter, Lat.] The person guilty of adultery.

With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife by her procuring husband sold;
For tho' the law makes nail th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed.
Dryden's Juvenal.

ADU'LTERESS. n. s. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when she was asked, What was the punishment for adulteresses? There are no such things here.
Government of the Tongue, § 3.

Helen's rich attire,
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought.
Dryden's Virgil.

ADU'LTERINE. n. s. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child born of an adulteress: a term of canon law.

ADU'LTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

Th' adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noses it against us.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable, and to make provision for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think on whose faith th' adulterous youth rely'd;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride?
Dryden's Æneid.

ADU'LTERY. n. s. [adulterium, Lat.] The act of violating the bed of a married person.

All thy domestic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adultery, with the servant's theft;
And (the most racking thought which can intrude)
Forget false friends, and their ingratitude.
Dryden's Juvenal.

ADU'MBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That which gives a slight resemblance.

To ADU'MBRATE. v. a. [adumbro, Lat.] To shadow out; to give a slight likeness; to exhibit a faint resemblance, like that which shadows afford of the bodies which they represent.

Heaven is designed for our reward, as well as refuge; and therefore is adumbrated by all those positive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRA'TION. n. s. [from adumbrate.]

1. The

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a slight and imperfect representation. See ADUMBRATE.

To make some adumbration of that we mean, it is rather an impulsion or contusion of the air, than an effusion or section of the same.
Bac. Nat. Hist, N° 187.

2. The slight and imperfect representation of a thing; a faint sketch.

The observers view but the backside of the hangings; the right one is on the other side the grave: and our knowledge is but like those broken ends; at best a most confused adumbration.
Glanvill's Scepsis Scientifica.

Those of the first sort have some adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the sensible. Hale's Origin.

ADUNA'TION. n. s. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The state of being united; union: a word of little use.

When, by glaciation, wood, straw, dust, and water, are supposed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cause any real union or adunation, but only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice, the other bodies, being accidentally present in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADU'NCITY. n. s. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedness; flexure inwards; hookedness.

There can be no question, but the adunicy of the pounces and beaks of the hawk, is the cause of the great and habitual immortality of those animals. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

ADU'NQUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inwards; hooked.

The birds that are speakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens; of which parrots have an adunque bill, but the rest not.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 238.

A'DVOCACY. n. s. [from advocate.] The act of pleading; vindication; defence: apology; a word in little use.

If any there are who are of opinion that there are no antipodes, or that the stars do fall, they shall not want herein the applause or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

A'DVOCATE. n. s. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cause of another in a court of judicature.

An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that person who has the pleading and management of a judicial cause. In a strict way of speaking, only that person is stiled advocate, who is the patron of the cause, and is often, in Latin, termed togatus, and, in English, a person of the long robe. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Learn what thou ow'st thy country and thy friend;
What's requisite to spare, and what to spend:
Learn this; and, after, envy not the store
Of the great'd advocate that grinds the poor.
Dryden's Persius.

2. He that pleads any cause, in whatever manner, as a controvertist or vindicator.

If she dares trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew 't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loud'st. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Of the several forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that come nearest commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by fresher experience.
Temple's Miscellanies.

3. It is used with the particle for before the person or thing, in whose favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone.
Pope's Epistles.

4. In the scriptural and sacred sense, it stands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me his advocate,
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft. Milton's Parad. Lost.

ADVOCA'TION. n. s. [from advocate.] The office or act of pleading; plea; apology.

My advocation is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd.
Shakespeare's Othello.

ADVOLA'TION. n. s. [advolo, advolatum, Lat.] The act of flying to something.
Dict.

ADVOLU'TION. n. s. [advolutio, Lat.] The act of rolling to something.

ADVO'UTRY. n. s. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery.

He was the most perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE'. n. s. He that has the right of advowson. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZIN. n. s. [In common law.] A right to present to a benefice, and signifies as much as Jus Patronatûs. In the canon law, it is so termed, because they that originally obtained the right of presenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed sometimes Patroni, sometimes Advocati. Cowell.

To ADURE. v. n. [aduro, Lat.] To burn up: not in use.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor scorch, doth mellow, and not adure.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 319.

ADU'ST. adj. [adustus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up; hot as with fire; scorched.

By this means, the virtual heat of the water will be greater; and such a heat as will not make the body adust, or fragile. Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Lybian air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime.
Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philosophical sense, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are adust, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as choler, and the like. Quincy.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state.
The same adust complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field. Pope.

ADU'STED. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt; scorched; dried with fire.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle art
Concocted, and adusted they reduced
To blackest grain, and into store conveyed.
Paradise Lost.

2. Hot, as the complexion.

They are but the heats of adusted choler and the corporations of a vindicative spirit. Howell.

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust.] That which may be adusted, or burnt up. Dict.

ADU'STION. n. s. [from adust.] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequence of a burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion, upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a manifest fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ. n. s. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the æ of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the æ of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

ÆGILOPS. n. s. [αἰγιλωψ, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.] A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: also a plant so called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy.

Ægilops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye. Wiseman's Surgery.

ÆGLOGUE. n. s. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology.] A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goat-herds.

Which moved him to speak to æglogues otherwise to write, doubtless perdie, I cannot say, which he little need'd, or much desire to intreath our tongue with this kind wherein it far excels.
Spenser's Pastorals.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. s. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrease, and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL [in compound name, as πᾶν in the Greek compounds] signifies all, or altogether. So Ælbert is a complete conqueror: Albert, all illustrious: so Alard, altogether towards: Alfric, altogether powerful. To these Pammachius, Panaretus, Pamphilus, &c. do in some measure answer. Gibson's Camden.

ÆLI [which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ali, eali, elip, hilp, helie, and, at this day, relp] implies assistance. So Ælfric is auxiliaris; and Ælfwold, an auxiliary government; Ælgifa, a lender of assistance, with which Boetius, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibson's Camden.

ÆNIGMA. See ENIGMA.

AE'RIAL. adj. [aerius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.

The thunder,
When to roll
With terrour through the dark aerial hall.
Paradise Lost.

From all that can with fins or feathers fly,
Thro the aerial or the watry sky. Prior.

I gathered the thickness of the air, or aerial interval, of the glasses at that ring.
Newton's Opticks.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles than animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air.

The rest of human toil, their daily food,
Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews.
Dryden's Virg. Georg.

3. Inhabiting the air.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild, of calm and serene air.
Paradise Regained.

Aerial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air.

Here subterranean works and cities see,
There towns aerial on the waving tree.
Pope's Essay on Man.

5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air.

A spacious city stood, with fairest walls
Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,
Aerial spires, and citadels, the seat
Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

A'ERIE. n. s. [airie, Fr.] The proper word, in hawks and other birds of prey, for that which we generally call a neſt in other birds. Cowell.

AERO'SCOPY. n. ſ. [ἀὴρ and σκοπέω, Gr.] The obſervation of the air. Dict.

Æ'THIOPS-MINERAL. n. ſ. A medicine ſo called, from its dark colour, prepared of quickſilver and ſulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such as have uſed it moſt, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTI'TES. n. ſ. [ἀετὸς, an eagle.] Eagle-ſtone. It is about the bigneſs of a cheſtnut, and hollow, with ſomewhat in it that rattles upon ſhaking. Quincy.

AFA'R. adv. [from a and at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great diſtance.

So ſhaken as we are, ſo wan with care,
Find we a time for frighted peace to pant,
And breathe ſhort-winded accents of new broil,
To be commenc'd in ſtrands afar remote.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

We hear better when we hold our breath: from contrary; inſomuch as in liſtening to attain a ſound afar off, men hold their breath.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 284.

2. To or from a great diſtance.

Hector haſtened to receive his bow;
Diſmiſs'd his beaver'd helm that ſhone afar,
The pride of warriors, and the pomp of war.
Dryden.

3. From afar; from a diſtant place.

The rough Barbarian, furious in the courſe,
With ſtout deſigns divides the fearful gloom,
And from afar in hollow murmur foams.
Addiſon on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely diſtant.

Much ſuſpecting his ſecret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but ſecretly and afar off, and to be governed as occaſions ſhould vary.
Sir John Hayward.

AFE'ARD. participial adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

He boldly ſtay'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven ſent
A flake of fire, that flaſhing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almoſt made afeard.
Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afeard?
Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three ſuch enemies again.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Till he cheriſh too much beard,
And make Love, or me, afeard.
Ben Jonſon's Underwoods.

AFFE'CT. n. ſ. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; paſſion; ſenſation.

It ſeemeth that as the feet have a ſympathy with the head, ſo the wrift have a ſympathy with the heart; we ſee the affects and paſſions of the heart and ſpirits are notably diſcloſed by the pulſe. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 97.

2. Quality; circumſtance.

I find it difficult to make out one ſingle ulcer, as authors deſcribe it, without other ſymptoms or affects joined to it. Wiſeman.

This is only the antiquated word for affection.

To AFFE'CT. v. a. [affecter, Fr. affecto, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects in any other thing.

The ſun
Had firſt his precept ſo to move, ſo ſhine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat,
Scarce tolerable. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. x.

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; ſo far as theſe qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.

Yet even thoſe two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the ſame force and vigour, as they would do at the ſame diſtance in any other ſituation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the paſſions.

As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected with the idea of his appearing in the preſence of that Being, whom none can ſee and live; he muſt be much more affected, when he conſiders, that this Being, whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or puniſh him accordingly.
Addiſon, Spectator, N° 513.

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: ſpoken of perſons.

Atrides broke
His ſilence next, but ponder'd ere he ſpoke:
Wiſe are thy words, and glad I would obey,
But thus proud man affects imperial ſway.
Dryden's Iliad.

4. To tend to; to endeavour after; ſpoken of things.

The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as the globe of the earth and ſea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity.
Newton's Opticks.

5. To be fond of; to be pleaſed with; to love; to regard with fondneſs.

That little which ſome of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning ſuch matter as the ſacred Scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful ſort affect. Hooker, b. i.

There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience riſe.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Think not that wars we love, and thoſe affect;
Or that we hate ſweet peace. Fairfax, b. ii.

None but a woman could a man direct
To tell us women what we moſt affect.
Dryd. Wife of Bath.

6. To make a ſhew of ſomething; to ſtudy the appearance of any thing; with ſome degree of hypocriſy.

Another nymph, amongſt the many fair,
Before the reſt affected ſtill to ſtand,
And watch'd my eye, preventing my command.
Prior.

Theſe often carry the humour ſo far, till their affected coldneſs and indifference quite kills all the fondneſs of a lover. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 171.

Coquet and coy at once her air,
Both ſtudied, though both ſeem neglected;
Careleſs ſhe is with artful care,
Affecting to ſeem unaffected. Congreve.

The conſcious huſband, whom like ſymptoms ſeize,
Changes on her the guilt of their diſeaſe;
Affecting fury, acts a madman's part,
Hell'ſhip the fatal ſecret from her heart. Granville.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and conſtrained manner.

Spenſer, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius.
Ben Jonſon's Diſcoveries.

8. To

6. To convict of some crime; to attaint with guilt; a phrase merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promised and not paid, the husband is not obliged to allow her alimony. But if her parents shall become insolvent by some misfortune, she shall have alimony, unless you can affect them with fraud, in promising what they knew they were not able to perform. Ayliffe's Parergon.

AFFECTA'TION. n. s. [affectatio, Lat.]

1. Fondness; high degree of liking; commonly with some degree of culpability.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with sound judgment, misliked conformity between the church of God and infidels, the cause thereof hath been somewhat else than only affectation of dissimilitude. Hooker, b. iv. § 7.

2. An artificial shew; an elaborate appearance; a false pretence.

It has been, from age to age, an affectation to love the pleasure of solitude, among those who cannot possibly be supposed qualified for passing life in that manner. Spectator, N° 264.

AFFE'CTED. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally disposed or inclined.

No marvel then if he were ill affected.

AFFE'CTION. n. s. [affection, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The state of being affected by any cause, or agent. This general sense is little in use.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe sings i' th' nose,
Cannot contain their urine, for affection.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Passion of any kind.

Then 'gan the Palmer thus: most wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end.
Fairy Queen.

[redacted] my late solitary life, which is prone
Sidney, b. i.

Affections, as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with such like, being, as it were, the sundry fashions and forms of appetite, can neither rise at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet choose but rise at the sight of some things. Hooker, b. i.

To speak truth of Cæsar,
I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Zeal ought to be composed of the highest degrees of pious affections; of which some are milder and gentler, some sharper and more vehement.
Spratt's Sermons.

I can present nothing beyond this to your affections, to excite your love and desire. Dillon.

3. Love; kindness; good-will to some persons; often with to or towards before the person.

I have acquainted you
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answered my affection.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.
Shakespeare.

Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.

Make his interest depend upon mutual affection and good correspondence with others.
Collier's Moral Essays. Kindness.

Not at first sight, nor with a dear embrace,
Fire your blood, and your dull body heat;
He that affects, feels not the soft desire.
Dryden.

4. Good-will to any object; zeal; affectionate regard.

I have reason to distrust mine own judgment; that which may be overborne by new and affected reasons. Bacon.

Set your affections upon my words, desire them, and be thankful for instruction. Hooker, Serm. II.

His integrity to the king was without blemish, and his affection to the church so notorious, that he never declined it. Clarendon.

All the practices of Christianity command us to moderate our passions, to temper our affections to worldly things below. Tillotson.

Let not the mind of a student be under the influence of warm affections to things of fancy, when he comes to the search of truth.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

I am your own,
In many an ill-composed affection, such
As I dislike; therefore, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted.
Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty or accuracy which is attributed to what mathematicians deliver, must be restrained to what they teach, concerning those purely mathematical disciplines, arithmetick or geometry, where the affections of quantity are abstractedly considered. Boyle.

The mouth being necessary to conduct the voice to the shape of its cavity, necessarily gives the voice some particular affection of sound in its passage before it come to the lips.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial souls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from those different laws of union, there will arise quite different affections, and natures, and species of the compound being. Bentley's Sermons.

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cause.

It seemed to me a venereal gonorrhœa, and others thought it arose from some scorbutical affection.
Wiseman's Surgery.

8. Lively representation in painting.

Affection is the lively representment of any passion whatsoever, as if the figures stood not upon a cloth or board, but as if they were acting upon a stage. Wotton's Architecture.

9. It is used by Shakespeare sometimes for affectation.

There was nothing in it that could indict the author of affection. Shakespeare.

AFFE'CTIONATE. adj. [affectionné, Fr. from affection.]

1. Full of affection; strongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and desire to please him, men can never be too affectionate: and it is as true, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes passionate. Spratt's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; disposed to; with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it presently took fire, being affectionate of itself to the worst part.
Bacon's Henry VII.

That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. Trust in general; confidence; secure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

3. Trust in the divine promises and protection. To this sense it is now almost confined.

Religion receives man into a covenant of grace, where there is pardon reached out to all truly penitent sinners, and assistance promised, and engaged, and bestowed upon very easy conditions, viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

There can be no surer way to success, than by disclaiming all confidence in ourselves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

To AFFI'ANCE. v. a. [from the noun affiance.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promise to marriage.

To me, fair maid, or rather widow sad,
He was affianced long time before,
And sacred pledge he both gave and had;
False, errant knight, infamous, and forsworn.
Fairy Queen.

Her should Angelo have married, was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, his brother was wrecked, having in that vessel the dowry of his sister.
Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest
Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly guest.
Pope's Odyssey.

AFFI'ANCER. n. s. [from affiance.] He that makes a contract of marriage between two parties. Dict.

AFFIDA'TION. } n. s. [from affido, Lat.
AFFIDA'TURE. } See AFFIED.] Mutual contract; mutual oath of fidelity. Dict.

AFFIDA'VIT. n. s. [affidavit signifies, in the language of the common law, he made oath.] A declaration upon oath.

You said, if I return'd next time in Lent,
I should be in remitter of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.

Count Rechteren should have made affidavit that his servants had been affronted, and then Monsieur Manager would have done him justice.
Spectator, N° 481.

AFFI'ED. participial adj. [from the verb affy, derived from affido, Lat. Bracton using the phrase affidare mulieres.] Joined by contract; affianced.

Be we affied, and such assurance ta'en,
As shall with either part's agreement stand.
Shakesp.

AFFILIA'TION. n. s. [from ad and filius, Lat.] Adoption; the act of taking a son. Chambers.

A'FFINAGE. n. s. [affinage, Fr.] The act of refining metals by the cupel. Dict.

AFFI'NED. adj. [from affinis, Lat.] Joined by affinity to another; related to another.

If partially affin'd, or league in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier. Shakespeare's Othello.

AFFI'NITY. n. s. [affinité, Fr. from affinis, Lat.]

1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted by the husband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to those of the husband. It is opposed to consanguinity, or relation by birth.

In this sense it has sometimes the particle with, and sometimes to, before the person to whom the relation is contracted.

They had left none alive, by the blindness of rage killing many guiltless persons, either for affinity to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant killers. Sidney, b. ii.

And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter.
1 Kings, iii. 1.

A breach was made with France itself, notwithstanding so strait an affinity, so lately accomplished; as if indeed (according to that pleasant maxim of state) kingdoms were never married. Watton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; resemblance to: spoken of things.

The British tongue, or Welsh, was in use only in this island, having great affinity with the old Gallick. Camden.

All things that have affinity with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon, Essay xxiv.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryd. Dufresnoy, Pref.

Man is more distinguished by devotion than by reason, as several brute creatures discover something like reason, though they betray not any thing that bears the least affinity to devotion.
Addison, Spect. N° 201.

To AFFI'RM. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently: opposed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elve.
Shakesp. Henry V.

To AFFI'RM. v. a.

1. To declare positively; as, to affirm a fact.

2. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment: opposed to reverse or repeal.

The house of peers hath a power of judicature in some cases, properly to examine, and then to affirm; or, if there be cause, to reverse the judgments which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villers.

In this sense we say, to affirm the truth.

AFFI'RMABLE. adj. [from affirm.] That which may be affirmed.

Those attributes and conceptions that were applicable and affirmable of him when present, are now affirmable and applicable to him though past.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

AFFI'RMANCE. n. s. [from affirm.] Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

This statute did but restore an ancient statute, which was itself also made out in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFI'RMANT. n. s. [from affirm.] The person that affirms; a declarer. Dict.

AFFIRMA'TION. n. s. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: opposed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouches, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and less attemptable, than any of our ladies.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The position affirmed.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon his despair is founded; and one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is, to convince him, that Christ's death, if he perform the condition required, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation: opposed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land observe, that our statutes sometimes are only the affirmation, or ratification, of that which, by common law, was held before. Hooker.

AFFI'RMATIVE. adj. [from affirm.]

1. That which affirms, opposed to negative; in which sense we use the affirmative absolutely, that is, the affirmative position.

For the affirmative, we are now to answer such proofs of theirs as have been before alleged.
Hooker.

Whether there are such beings or not, 'tis sufficient for my purpose, that many have believed the affirmative. Dryden.

2. That which can or may be affirmed: a sense used chiefly in science.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vanish or cease, there negative ones begin; so in mechanicks, where attraction ceases, there a repulsive virtue ought to succeed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to persons, he who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; positive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative in an uncertain matter, but report things modestly and temperately, according to the degree of that persuasion, which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reason, inducing thee. Taylor.

AFFI'RMATIVELY. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the positive side; not negatively.

The reason of man hath no such restraint; concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the last heavens, but also denying, there is any vacuity within them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AFFI'RMER. n. s. [from affirm.] The person that affirms.

If by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man; and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or, at most, our duty toward our neighbour, without including, in the idea of it, the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick.

To AFFI'X. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.]

1. To unite to the end, or à posteriori; to subjoin.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another.
Locke.

If men constantly affixed applause and disgrace where they ought, the principle of shame would have a very good influence on publick conduct; though on secret vices it lays no restraint.
Rogers's Sermons.

2. To connect consequentially.

The doctrine of irresistibility of grace, in working whatsoever it works, if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixed to gratitude.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Simply to fasten or fix. Obsolete.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold
So many gazers as on her do stare,
Upon the lowly ground affixed are. Spenser.

AFFI'X. n. s. [affixum, Lat.] A term of grammar. Something united to the end of a word.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its affixes, to denote the pronouns possessive or relative.
Clarke's Latin Grammar.

AFFI'XION. n. s. [from affix.]

1. The act of affixing.

2. The state of being affixed. Dict.

AFFLA'TION. n. f. [affio, afflatum, Lat.] The act of breathing upon any thing. Dict.

AFFLA'TUS. n. f. [Lat.] Communication of the power of prophecy.

The poet writing against his genius, will be like a prophet without his afflatus. Spence on the Odyssey.

To AFFLI'CT. v. a. [affligo, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

It teacheth us how God thought fit to plague and afflict them; it doth not appoint in what form and manner we ought to punish the sin of idolatry in others. Hooker, b. v. § 17.

O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me! The lights burn blue—Is it not dead midnight? Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Give not over thy mind to heaviness, and afflict not thyself in thine own counsel. Ecclus. xxx. 21.

A father afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child soon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man, and delivered to those that were under him ceremonies and sacrifices. Wisdom.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye,
And my heart labours with a sudden sigh. Prior.

1. The passive to be afflicted, has often at before the causal noun; by is likewise proper.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison, Spect.

AFFLI'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from afflicted.] The state of affliction, or of being afflicted; sorrowfulness; grief.

AFFLI'CTER. n. f. [from afflict.] The person that afflicts.

AFFLI'CTION. n. f. [affliction, Lat.]

1. The cause of pain or sorrow; calamity.

To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous; therefore nature, which causeth fear, teacheth to pray against all adversity. Hooker, b. v. § 48.

We'll bring you to one that you have cozened of money; I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction. Shakespeare.

1. The state of sorrowfulness; misery: opposed to joy or prosperity.

Besides you know,
Prosperity's the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion, and whose heart together,
Affliction alters. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Where shall we find the man that bears affliction,
Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato? Addison's Cato.

Some virtues are only seen in affliction, and some in prosperity. Addison, Spectator, N° 257.

AFFLI'CTIVE. adj. [from afflict.] That which causes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty dressed up indeed with all that was terrible and afflictive to human nature, yet not at all the less a duty. South.

Nor can they find
Where to retire themselves, or where appease
The afflictive keen desire of food, expos'd
To winds, and storms, and jaws of savage death. Philips.

Restless Proserpine—
—On the spacious land and liquid main
Spreads slow disease, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

AFFLUENCE. n. f. [affluence, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concourse. It is almost always used figuratively.

I shall not relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince being there had been noised. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; stream of wealth; plenty.

Those degrees of fortune, which give fulness and affluence to one station, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace. Pope.

A'FFLUENCY. n. f. The same with affluence.

A'FFLUENT. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

These parts are no more than foundation-piles of the ensuing body; which are afterwards to be increased and raised to a greater bulk, by the affluent blood that is transmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I see thee, Lord and end of my desire,
Loaded and blest with all the affluent store,
Which human vows at smoking shrines implore. Prior.

A'FFLUENTNESS. n. f. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

A'FFLUX. n. f. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to some place; affluence.

2. That which flows to another place.

The cause hereof cannot be a supply by procreations; ergo, it must be by new affluxes to London out of the country. Graunt.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey on Consumptions.

An animal that must lie still, receives the efflux of colder or warmer, clean or foul water, as it happens to come to it. Locke.

AFFLU'XION. n. f. [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation either simple, consisting of an hot and sanguineous affluxion, or else denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AFFO'RD. v. a. [affourrer, affourrager, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the soil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This seems to be the primitive signification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good sense, and sometimes in a bad, but less properly.

So soon as Maurmon there arriv'd, the door
To him did open, and afforded way. Fairy Queen.

This is the consolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and security; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth despair and remediless calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To be able to sell. It is used always with reference to some certain price; as, I can afford this for less than the other.

They sell their magazines in times of the greatest plenty, that so they may afford cheaper, and increase the public revenue at a small expence of its members. Addison on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, travellers can afford more finery in peace than war.

The same errours run through all families, where there is wealth enough to afford that their sons may be good for nothing. Swift on Modern Education.

To AFFO'REST. v. a. [afforestare, Lat.] To turn ground into forest.

It appeareth, by Charta de Foresta, that he afforested many woods and wastes, to the grievance of the subject, which by that law were disafforested. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

AFFORESTA'TION. n. f. [from afforest.] The charter de Foresta was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforestations, and much extended the rigour of the forest laws. Hale's Common Law of England.

To AFFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [affranchir, Fr.] To make free.

To AFFRA'Y. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr. which Menage derives from fragor; perhaps it comes from frigus.] To fright; to terrify; to strike with fear. This word is not now in use.

The same to wight he never would disclose,
But when as monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRA'Y, or AFFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A tumultuous assault of one or more persons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this sense it is written fray.

2. Tumult; confusion: out of use.

Let the night be calm and quiet time,
Without tempestuous storms or sad affray. Spenser.

AFFRI'CTION. n. f. [affrictio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times observed, in wearing silver-hilted swords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriction would quickly blacken them; and, congruously hereunto, I have found pens blacked almost all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a silver case. Boyle.

To AFFRI'GHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify. It generally implies a sudden impression of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Godlike his courage seem'd, whom not delight
Could soften, nor the fact of death affright. Waller.

He, when his country (threaten'd with alarm)
Requires his courage and his conq'ring arm,
Shall, more than once, the Punic bands affright. Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is used in the passive, sometimes with at before the thing feared.

Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you. Deut. vii. 21.

3. Sometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

As one affright
With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then upraise. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.

AFFRI'GHT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does shew to him that walks in fear and sad affright. Fairy Queen.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house;
Yet still he was at hand, without request,
To serve the sick, to succour the distress'd;
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempestuous night. Dryden's Fables.

2. The

2. The cause of fear; a terrible object; dreadful appearance.

I see the gods
Upbraid our suff'rings, and would humble them,
By sending these affrights, while we are here,
That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear.
B. Jonſ. Catiline.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And rises ev'ry moment to the sight. Dryd. Æneid.

AFFRI'GHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour; terrible; dreadful.

There is an absence of all that is destructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

AFFRI'GHTMENT. n. ſ. [from affright.]

1. The impression of fear; terrour.

She awaked with the affrightment of a dream.
Wotton.

Passionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment, which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impression. Locke.

2. The state of fearfulness.

Whether those that, under any anguish of mind, return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRO'NT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem ſtare; ad frontem contumeliam alludere, to insult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This seems the genuine and original sense of the word, which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia. Shakſpeare's Hamlet.

The fourteenth, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway, whom when they found both ready and resolute to fight, they desired enterparlance. Sir John Hayward.

2. To meet, in an hostile manner, front to front.

How holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd,
And with them darkness durst affront his light.
Paradiſe Loſt.

3. To offer an open insult; to offend avowedly. With respect to this sense, it is observed by Cervantes, that, if a man strikes another on the back, and then runs away, the person so struck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a justification of the act.

Did not the fatal war affront thy coast?
Yet sattest thou an idle looker-on. Daniel, i. 51.

But harm precedes not sin, only our foe,
Tempting, affronts us with his foul esteem
Of our integrity. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

I would learn the cause, why Dorrimond,
Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almost within my sight, affronts a prince,
Who shortly shall command him.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

This brings to mind Faustina's fondness for the gladiator, and is interpreted as satire. But how can one imagine, that the Fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius? Addiſon.

AFFRO'NT. n. ſ. [from the verb affront.]

1. Open opposition; encounter: a sense not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Fearless of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hostile ground, none daring my affront.
Samſon Agoniſtes.

2. Insult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment; contumely.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his son. Bacon's Eſſays.

You've done enough; for you design'd my chains:
The grace is vanish'd, but th' affront remains.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

He that is found reasonable in one thing, is concluded to be so in all; and to think or say otherwise, is thought so unjust an affront, and so senseless a censure, that nobody ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or idiots.
Addiſon's Spectator, N° 512

3. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general sense.

Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law with foul affronts,
Abominations rather. Milton's Paradiſe Regained.

4. Disgrace; shame. This sense is rather peculiar to the Scottish dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great presumption, was defeated, upon the sense of which affront he died with grief.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

AFFRO'NTER. n. ſ. [from affront.] The person that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. participial adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting; contumelious.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean, some are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, because of the secondary idea which custom has affixed to them. Watts's Logick.

To AFFU'SE. v. a. [affundo, affuſum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I poured acid liquors, to try if they could find any volatile salt or spirit, which would probably have discovered itself, by making an ebullition with the affused liquor. Boyle.

AFFU'SION. n. ſ. [affuſio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affusion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew's Muſæum.

To AFFY'. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king.
Shakſpeare's Henry VI.

To AFFY'. v. n. To put confidence in; to put trust in; to confide. Not in use.

Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
That I will here dismount my loving friends.
Shakſp. Titus Andr.

AFI'ELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the gray fly winds her sultry horn,
Batt'ning our flocks with the fresh dews of night.
Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To mark my time, for to the field to rouse the crew.
Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat. See FLAT.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many trees of fruit trees, take a box tree, and bow it, and lay all the branches aflat upon the ground, and cast earth upon them; and every two will take root.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

AFLO'AT. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; born up in the water; not sinking: in a figurative sense, within view; in motion.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now aflat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures. Shakeſpeare's Julius Cæſar.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and aflat, and, just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gunpowder, will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally several hundred loads of timber aflat, for they cut above twenty-five leagues up the river; and other rivers bring in their contributions. Addiſon's Italy.

AFOOT. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horseback.

He thought it best to return, the next day, to a village not far off, and dispatching his horse in some sort, the next day early, to come afoot thither. Shakeſpeare.

2. In action; as, a deſign is afoot.

I prythee, tell me what this sad afoot,
Ivy with the wings of speed is early out
Of your eyrie, uncle. Shakeſpeare.

3. In motion.

O. Are my lord and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not—

'Tis said they are afoot. Shakſpeare's King Lear.

AFORE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]

1. Not behind; as, he held the shield afore: not in use.

2. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as, he stood afore him.

3. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you. Shakſpeare's King Lear.

AFO'RE. adv.

1. In time foregone or past.

Whosoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and he thereon be hanged.
Eſdras, vi. 22.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his wit. Shakſpeare's Twelfth N.

2. First in the way.

Alarbas, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd;
Will you go on afore? Shakſpeare's Othello.

3. In front; in the fore-part.

Approaching nigh, he reared high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vast. Fairy Q.

AFO'RE-GOING. participial adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

AFO'REHAND. adv. [from afore and hand.]

1. By a previous provision.

Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account.
Government of the Tongue.

2. Provided; prepared; previously fitted.

Spain would be found, even in the former times, when it was most spoken, Spain was not so mighty as it is, and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in power.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

AFO'REMENTIONED. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give him, or resist to the aforementioned, but were reduced themselves to the same servile condition. Arbuthnot.

AFO'RENAMED. adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate for a thing of circular form, in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter.
Peacham on Drawing.

AFO'RESAID. adj. [from afore and ſaid.] Said before.

It need not be a repetition, if we resume again that which we said in the aforesaid experiment.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 771.

AFO'RETIME. adv. [from afore and time.] In time paſt.

O thou that art waxen old in wickedneſs, now thy ſins which thou haſt committed aforetime are come to light. Sufanna.

AFRA'ID. participial adj. [from the verb affray: it ſhould therefore properly be written with ff.]

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.

To perſecute them with thy tempeſt, and make them afraid with thy ſtorm. Pſalm lxxxiii. 15.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguiſh of her ſpirit, thus ſhe pray'd.
Dryden's Fables.

If, while this wearied fleſh draws fleeting breath,
Not ſatisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will, that I ſhould know
Glimpſe of delight, or paſte fion anxious woe;
From now, from inſtant now, great Sire, diſpel
The clouds that preſs my ſoul. Pope.

AFRE'SH. adv. [from a and freſh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermiſſion.

The Germans ſerving upon great horſes, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by light ſkirmiſhes; the Turks, with their light horſes, eaſily ſhunning their charge, and again, at their pleaſure, charging them afreſh, when they ſaw the heavy horſes almoſt weary.
Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

When once we have attained theſe ideas, they may be excited afreſh by the uſe of words.
Watts's Logick.

AFRO'NT. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct oppoſition to the face.

Theſe four came all afront, and mainly thruſt at me. Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. i.

A'FTER. prep. [æfter, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and ſtood behind him. It is oppoſed to before.

What ſays Lord Warwick, ſhall we after them?—
—After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

2. In purſuit of.

After whom is the king of Iſrael come out? After whom doſt thou purſue? After a dead dog, after a flea. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14.

3. Behind. This is not a common uſe.

Sometimes I placed a third priſm after a ſecond, and ſometimes alſo a fourth after a third, by all which the image might be often refracted ſideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. Poſterior in time.

Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate, like the ſcenes of day and night.
Dryden's Fables.

We ſhall examine the ways of conveyance of the ſovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mint-man, but takes greatneſs of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinſic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus, in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon's Italy.

This alluſion is after the oriental manner: thus in the Pſalms, how frequently are perſons compared to cedars. Pope's Odyſſey, notes.

A'FTER. adv.

1. In ſucceeding time. It is uſed of time mentioned as ſucceeding ſome other. So we cannot ſay, I ſhall be happy after, but hereafter; but we ſay, I was firſt made miſerable by the loſs, but was after happier.

Far be it from me, to juſtify the cruelties which were at firſt uſed towards them, which had their reward ſoon after. Bacon.

Thoſe who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to ſeek their prey on earth, durſt fix
Their feats long after next the ſeat of God.
Paradiſe Loſt.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, leſt it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

AFTER is compounded with many words, but almoſt always in its genuine and primitive ſignification; ſome, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A'FTER ACCEPTATION. n. ſ. [from after and acceptation.] A ſenſe afterwards, not at firſt admitted.

Thirdly, I have noted as in a ſcientific ſpace, I mean, two each apart, contract the place: Some, who to ſay not length extend the line, The church's after acceptation join.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

A'FTERAGES. n. ſ. [from after and ages.] Succeſſive times; poſterity. Of this word I have found no ſingular; but ſee not why it might not be ſaid, This will be done in ſome afterage.

Nor the whole land, which the Chriſtites ſhould or might, in future time, conquer; ſeeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations.
Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Nor to philoſophers is praiſe denied,
Whoſe wiſe inſtructions afterages guide.
Sir J. Denham.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fair for a gibbet, to bring in a ſuperſtition, which their forefathers periſhed in flames to keep out. Atterbur.

A'FTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at laſt; in fine; in concluſion; upon the whole; at the moſt.

They have given no good proof in aſſerting this extravagant principle, for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a paſſage or two of ſcripture, miſerably perverted, in oppoſition to many expreſs texts. Atterbury's Sermons.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to ſome good old Author, whoſe works I ſtudy. Pope on Paſtoral Poetry.

A'FTERBIRTH. n. ſ. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the ſecundine.

The exorbitances of deſcenſions, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce ſuch virulent diſtempers of the blood, as make it caſt out a tumour.
Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'FTERCLAP. n. ſ. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair is ſuppoſed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's mead they chuſely went,
For fear of after-claps to prevent.
Spenſ. Hub. Tale.

It is commonly taken in an ill ſenſe.

A'FTERCOST. n. ſ. [from after and coſt.] The latter charges; the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.

You muſt take care to carry off the land floods and ſtreams, before you attempt draining; leſt your aftercoſt and labour prove unſucceſsful.
Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'FTERCROP. n. ſ. [from after and crop.] The ſecond crop or harveſt of the ſame year.

Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for the cattle.
Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'FTER-DINNER. n. ſ. [from after and dinner.] The hour paſſing juſt after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amuſement.

Thou haſt not youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's ſleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

A'FTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. ſ. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours made after the firſt effort or endeavour.

There is no reaſon why the ſound of a pipe ſhould leave traces in their brains, which, not firſt, but by their after-endeavours, ſhould produce the like ſounds. Locke.

A'FTER-INQUIRY. n. ſ. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.

You muſt either be directed by ſome that take upon them to know, or take upon yourſelf that, which, I am ſure, you do not know, or jump the after-enquiry on your peril. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

To A'FTEREYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view. This is not in uſe.

Thou ſhouldſt have made him
As little as a crow, or leſs, ere left
To after-eye him. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

A'FTERGAME. n. ſ. [from after and game.] The ſcheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practiſed after the original deſign has miſcarried; methods taken after the firſt turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open himſelf a little earlier than other men, delighting to play an aftergame, as well as forehand, which ſuit both their turns and fortune. Wotton.

The fables of the axe-handle and the wedge, ſave to precaution us not to put raſhly a good cauſe to the hazard upon an aftergame; but to weigh beforehand what we ſay and do. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Our firſt deſign, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an aftergame to play.
Addiſon's Cato.

A'FTERHOURS. n. ſ. [from after and hours.] The hours that ſucceed.

So ſmile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with ſorrow chide us not.
Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A'FTER-LIVER. n. ſ. [from after and live.] He that lives in ſucceeding times.

By this my preſent vent
Unto myſelf, let after-livers know. Sidney, b. ii.

A'FTERLOVE. n. ſ. [from after and love.] The ſecond or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the firſt, how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.
Shakeſpeare's Richard II.

A'FTERMATH. n. ſ. [from after and math, from mow.] The latter math; the ſecond crop of graſs, mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

A'FTERNOON. n. ſ. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty waining and diſtreſſed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her beſt days,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton eye.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

However,

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; and love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before.
Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But, when the business of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they spend the afternoon. Dryden's Persius, Sat. i.

A'FTERPAINS. n. s. [from after and pain.] The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the secundine.

A'FTERPART. n. s. [from after and part.] The latter part.

The sensibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the afterpart, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his piety and improvement. Locke.

A'FTERPROOF. n. s. [from after and proof.]

1. Evidence posterior to the thing in question.
2. Qualities known by subsequent experience.

All I now, that he likewise at first was much under the expectation of his aberpof; such a solar influence there is in the solar aspect. Wotton.

A'FTERTASTE. n. s. [from after and taste.] A taste remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

A'FTERTHOUGHT. n. s. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be used for secondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair;
Suspicions, and mistrustful surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all the view'd, in tawny dress'd,
Downlook'e, and with a cuckow on her fist.
Dryden's Fables.

A'FTER-TIMES. n. s. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTER-AGES.

You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Roman race, rising from the Trojan line,
In after-times should hold the world in awe,
And to the seas and ocean give the law.
Dryden's Virgil.

A'FTERTOSSING. n. s. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.

Contusions and tumults are only the impotent remorses of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertossings of a sea when the storm is laid. Addison's Freeholder.

A'FTERWARD. adv. [from after and peapb, Sax.] In succeeding time: sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.

Cases not thought upon before, may afterward spring up, and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former considerations did formerly presume to be instituted. Hooker.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

A'FTERWIT. n. s. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients after the occasion of using them is past. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling what's gone and past; so that afterwit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.

A'FTER-WRATH. n. s. [from after and wrath.] Anger when the provocation seems past.

I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
T' excuse their after-wrath.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

A'GA. n. s. The title of a Turkish military officer.

AGA'IN. adv. [agen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more; marking the repetition of the same thing.

The poor remnant of human seed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atalantis.

Should Nature's self invade the world again,
And o'er the centre spread the liquid main,
Thy pow'r were safe. Waller.

Go now, deluded man, and seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain.
Dryd. Æneid.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest, who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.

2. On the other hand; marking some opposition or contrariety.

His wit increased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Those things that we know not what to do withal, if we had them, and those things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame. L'Estrange's Fables.

3. On another part; marking a transition to some new consideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Oppress the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return, noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, His fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.

5. Back; in restitution.

When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows;
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask it you again.
Shakesp. King John.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence.

That he hath given will he pay again.
Prov. xix. 27.

7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.

Question was asked of Demosthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He answered, Action. What next? Action. What next again? Action. Bacon's Essays.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them: and the cause of that again is either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon's Natural Hist.

8. Besides; in any other time or place.

They have the Walloons, who are tall soldiers; yet that is but a spot of ground. But, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and seminary of brave military people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much; marking the same quantity once repeated.

There are whom heav'n has blest with store of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at strife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife.
Pope.

I should not be sorry to see a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition; often.

This is not to be obtained by one or two hasty readings: it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenour of the discourse. Locke.

11. In opposition; by way of resistance.

Who art thou that answerest again?
Rom. ix. 20.

12. Back; as, returning from some message.

Bring us word again which way we shall go.
Deut. i. 22.

AGA'INST. prep. [ænzeon, onzeonð, Sax.]

1. In opposition to any person.

And he will be a wild man, his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; opposite, in general.

That authority of men should prevail with men either against or above reason, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the co-operation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

The preventing goodness of God does even wrest him from himself, and save him, as it were, against his will. South.

The god, uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd, at once, to rid himself of pain;
And, tho' against his custom, call'd aloud. Dryden.

Men often say a thing is against their conscience, when really it is not. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all that can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of; and that many more things may be than are: and if so, after all our arguments against a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotson.

The church-clergy have written the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared in England. Swift.

4. With contrary motion or tendency: used of material action.

Boils and plagues
Plaister you o'er, that one infect another
Against the wind a mile. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the fresh air; and many times flieth against the wind, as trouts and salmons swim against the stream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught against my life
Thy country sought of thee, it sought unjustly,
Against the law of nature, law of nations. Milton.

Against the public sanctions of the peace,
Against all omens of their ill success;
With fates averse, the root in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court.
Dryden.

6. Opposite to, in place.

Against the Tiber's mouth, but far away.
Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another. See sense 5.

And, when thou think'st of her eternity,
Think not that death against her nature is;
Think it a birth: and when thou go'st to die,
Sing like a swan, as if thou went'st to bliss.
Sir J. Davies.

8. In provision for; in expectation of.

This mode of speaking probably had its original from the idea of making provision provision against, or in oppoſition to, a time of misfortune, but by degrees acquired a neutral ſenſe. It ſometimes has the caſe elliptically ſuppreſſed, as, againſt he comes, that is, againſt the time when he comes.

Thence ſhe them brought into a ſtately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair diſpred,
And ready dight with drapets feſtival,
Againſt the viands ſhould be miniſtred.
Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them againſt the time they ſhould come to ſettle themſelves in the land promiſed unto their fathers. Hooker.

Some ſay, that ever 'gainſt that ſeaſon comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning ſingeth all night long:
And then they ſay no ſpirit walks abroad;
The nights are wholeſome, then no planets ſtrike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm;
So hallow'd and ſo gracious is the time.
Shakeſp. Hamlet.

To that purpoſe, he made haſte to Briſtol, that all things might be ready againſt the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Againſt the promis'd time provides with care,
And haſtens in the woof the robes he was to wear.
Dryden.

All which I grant to be reaſonably and truly ſaid, and only deſire they may be remembered againſt another day. Stillingfleet.

A'GALAXY. n. ſ. [from α and γάλα, Gr.] Want of milk. Dict.

AGA'PE. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerneſs; as, a bird gapes for meat.

In himſelf was all his ſtate;
More ſolemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long
Of horſes led, and groom besmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and ſets them all agape.
Paradiſe Loſt.

Dazzle the crowd, and ſet them all agape.
Philips.

The whole crowd ſtood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator, N° 572.

A'GARICK. n. ſ. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of uſe in phyſic, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female; the male is uſed only in dying, the female in medicine: the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excreſcences which grow upon trees, both of them in the nature of muſhrooms; the one the Romans call boletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks; though it be affirmed by ſome, that it groweth alſo at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST. adj. [This word, which is uſually, by later authors, written aghaſt, is, not improbably, the true word derived from agaze, which has been written aghaſt, from a miſtaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terrour; amazed; frighted to aſtoniſhment.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' adventrous bands,
With ſhudd'ring horrour pale, and eyes agaſt,
View'd firſt their lamentable lot, and found
No reſt. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A'GATE. n. ſ. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious ſtone of the loweſt claſs, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In ſhape no bigger than an agate ſtone,
On the forefinger of an alderman.
Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind; they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or ſpotted with different colours, chiefly duſky, black, brown, red, and ſometimes blue. Woodward.

A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter; the whole covered over with a friable cretaceous cruſt. Woodward.

To AGA'ZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to ſet a gazing; as, amaze, amuſe, and others.] To ſtrike with amazement; to ſtupify with ſudden terrour. The verb is now out of uſe.

So as they travell'd, ſo they 'gan eſpy
An armed knight toward them gallop faſt,
That ſeemed from ſome feared foe to fly,
Or other grieſly thing that him agaſt. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED. participial adj. [from agaze; which ſee.] Struck with amazement; terrified to ſtupidity.

Hundreds he ſent to hell, and none durſt ſtand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd, "The devil was in arms!"
All the whole army ſtood agazed on him.
Shakeſp. Henry VI

AGE. n. ſ. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage; it is deduced by Menage from ætatium, of ætas; by Junius, from ai, which, in the Teutonic dialects, ſignified long duration.]

1. Any period of time attributed to ſomething as the whole, or part, of its duration: in this ſenſe, we ſay, the age of man, the ſeveral ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being ſeven ages. Shakeſpeare.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt ſeventeen years; ſo the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and ſeven years. Geneſis, xlvii. 28.

2. A ſucceſſion or generation of men.

Hence, laſtly, ſprings one of poſterities,
For things th' ſame kind would ev'rlaſting make.
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age ſhall take.
Sir J. Davies.

Next to the Son,
Deſtin'd Reſtorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, ſhall to the ages riſe,
Or down from heav'n deſcend.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

No declining age
Ever felt the rapture of poetic rage. Roſcommon.

3. The time in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or ſhall live; as, the age of heroes.

No long'r now the golden age appears,
When patriarch wits ſurviv'd a thouſand years.
Pope.

4. The ſpace of a hundred years; a ſecular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old age; oldneſs.

You ſee how full of change his age is: the obſervation we have made of it hath not been little, he always loved our ſiſter moſt, and with what poor judgment he hath now caſt her off!
Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Boys muſt not have the ambition or paſſion of men, Nor men the weakneſſes of age. Bacon's Eſſays.

And on his ſtretched ſides a full-grown lion hung
The love-deſpiſed, and the age-ſlow prey'd;
Inſultin age will trace his cruel way,
And leave ſad marks of his deſtructive ſway.
Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeneſs; years of diſcretion; full ſtrength of life.

A ſeeming admiſſion of proficiency, all that either, being of age, deſire that admiſſion for themſelves, or that, in infancy, are by others preſented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our fires, not with their own content,
Had, ere we came to age, our portion ſpent.
Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of diſcretion; and twenty-one years is the full age: In a woman, at ſeven years of age, the lord her father may diſtrain his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years, ſhe is dowable; at twelve years, ſhe is able finally to ratify and confirm her former conſent given to matrimony; at fourteen, ſhe is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and ſhall be out of ward at the death of her anceſtor: at ſixteen, ſhe ſhall be out of ward, though, at the death of her anceſtor, ſhe was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, ſhe is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a ſtripling is enabled to chooſe his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may conſent to marriage. Cowell.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two ſyllables in poetry.]

1. Old; ſtricken in years; applied generally to animate beings.

If the converſation do bind between man and man, the aged, for the moſt part, are to be reverenced, leaſt ſubject to raſh and unadviſed paſſions. Hooker.

Novelty is only in requeſt; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of courſe, as it is virtuous to be conſtant in any undertaking.
Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Kindneſs in ſtate too weak a charm will prove,
To raiſe the frozen fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This uſe is rare, and commonly with ſome tendency to the proſopopœia.

The people did not more worſhip the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves; and the ſame Chriſtian faith of the aged oaks.
Stillingfleet's Defence of Diſcourſe on Rom. Idol.

A'GEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged perſon.

AGE'N. adv. [agen, Sax.] Again; in return. See AGAIN.

This word is now only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the ſake of rhime.

Thus Venus: Thus her ſon reply'd agen;
None of your ſiſters have we heard or ſeen.
Dryden.

A'GENCY. n. ſ. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the ſtate of being in action; action.

A few advices there are in the following papers, tending to aſſert the ſuperintendence and agency of Providence in the natural world.
Woodward's Prof. to Nat. Hiſtory.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; buſineſs performed by an agent.

Some of the purchaſers themſelves may be content to live cheap in a worſe country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies. Swift.

A'GENT. adj. [agens, Lat.] That which acts; oppoſed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This word is oft truly aſcribed unto the force of impreſſion upon the body agent, and then, by a ſecondary meaning, it may upon a diverſe body; as, for example, if a man carry a ring, or ſome part of a beaſt, between ſtrongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more induſtrious, and of more confident and perſiſting than otherwiſe he would be. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

A'GENT. n. ſ.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that poſſeſſes the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needless in regard of the agent, which feeth already what to reſolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the inſtrument,
Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known.
Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he foreſaw the will.
Freedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
And preſcience only held the ſecond place.
Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, conſequently being in effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A ſubſtitute; a deputy; a factor; a perſon employed to tranſact the buſineſs of another.

—All hearts in love, uſe your own tongues;
Let ev'ry eye negotiate for itſelf,
And truſt no agent. Shak. Sonn.

They had not the wit to ſend to them, in any orderly faſhion, agents or children grown to years, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,
Who not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your paſſion will purſue.
Dryden's Aureng.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

They produce ſeveral effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Tuyne.

AGELA'TION. n. ſ. [Lat. gelu.] Concretion of ice.

It is found in hail, and formed in its guttulous deſcent in the air, growing greater or leſſer according to the accretion of pluvious aggelation about the fundamental atoms thereof.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AGGENERA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The ſtate of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect mixture, there is required a tranſmutation of both; now where this converſion or aggeneration is made, there is alſo required, in the almoſt, a ſimilarity of matter.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGERO'SE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps Dict.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. a. [conglomero, Lat.]

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To pleaſe; to treat with civilities: a word not now in uſe.

And in the midſt thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour;
The which them did in moſteſt wiſe amate,
And each one fought his lady to aggrate.
Fairy Queen.

To A'GGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy, uſed only in a metaphorical ſenſe; as, to aggravate an accuſation, or a puniſhment.

A grove hard by, ſprung up with this their change,
His will who reigns above! to aggravate
Their penance, laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in Paradiſe, the bane of Eve
Uſ'd by the tempter. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

At glorious Turnus in the liſts appears,
And aggravating crimes augments their fears.
Dryd. Virg.

2. To make any thing worſe, by the addition of ſome particular circumſtance, not eſſential.

This offence, in itſelf ſo heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or diſcontent, but an aſpiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.
2. The act of enlarging to enormity.

A painter added a pair of whiſkers to the face, and by a little aggravation of the features changed it into the Saracen's head. Addiſon.

3. The extrinſical circumſtances or accidents, which increaſe the guilt of a crime, or the miſery of a calamity.

He, to the ſins which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt light of the contrary law. Hammond.

If it be weigh'd
By itſelf, with aggravations not imcharg'd,
Or elſe with juſt allowance counterpoiſ'd,
I may, it poſſible, thy pardon find
The ſafer way to me, or thy hatred leſs. Milton.

A'GGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one maſs, body, or ſyſtem.

The ſolid reaſon of one man with unprejudiced apprehenſions, begets as firm a belief as the authority or aggregate teſtimony of many hundreds.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonſenſical ſyſtems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

A'GGREGATE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The complex, or collective reſult of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reaſon of the far greateſt part of mankind, is but an aggregate of miſtaken phantaſms, and, in things not ſenſible, a conſtant deluſion.
Glanville's Sceptſis Scientifica.

A great number of living and thinking particles could not poſſibly, by their mutual contact, and preſſing, and ſtriking, compoſe one greater individual animal, with one mind and underſtanding, and a vital conſenſion of the whole body; any more than a ſwarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and conſtituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentley.

To A'GGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to accumulate; to heap many particulars into one maſs.

The aggregated ſoil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, ſmote. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

AGGREGA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggregate.]

1. Collection, or ſtate of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their ſingle numbers, once huddled together, they will be errour itſelf.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water reſident in the abyſs is, in all parts of it, ſtored with a conſiderable quantity of heat, and more eſpecially in thoſe where theſe extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen.
Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

3. The whole compoſed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

To AGGRE'SS. v. n. [aggredior, aggreſſum, Lat.] To commit the firſt act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The glorious pair advance
With mingled anger, and collected might,
To turn the war, and tell aggreſſing France,
How Britain's ſons and Britain's friends can fight.
Prior.

AGGRE'SSION. n. ſ. [aggreſſio, Lat.] The firſt act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by ſome act of iniquity.

There is no refuſing of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be alſo, on the other hand, a conſpiracy of common enmity and aggreſſion. L'Eſtrange.

AGGRE'SSOR. n. ſ. [from aggreſs.] The perſon that firſt commences hoſtility; the aſſaulter or invader, oppoſed to the defendant.

Fix in nature's face?
But how, if nature fly in my face firſt?
Then nature's the aggreſſor: Let her look to't.
Dryden.

It is a very unlucky circumſtance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of ſuch authors, whoſe works are ſo ſoon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the firſt aggreſſors.
Pope and Swift.

AGGRI'EVANCE. n. ſ. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardſhip inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRI'EVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To

1. To give ſorrow; to cauſe grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I ſaw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The ſpring, the place, and all clean out of ſight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour.
Spenſer.

2. To impoſe ſome hardſhips upon; to haraſs; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical ſenſe; and whenever it is uſed now, it ſeems to bear ſome alluſion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbiſhop of York, much aggrieved with ſome practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himſelf aggrieved by the falling of his rents, and the ſtreightening of his fortune; whilſt the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Chloe complains, and wond'rouſly 's aggriev'd.
Granville.

To AGGRO'U'P. v. a. [aggropare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleaſant to the ſight. Dryden.

AGHA'ST. adj. [either the participle of agaze (ſee AGAZE), and then to be written agazed, or agaſt, or from a and gaſt, a ghoſt, which the preſent orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horrour, as at the ſight of a ſpectre; ſtupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

She ſighing ſore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-ſtrings braſt,
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghaſt.
Spenſer.

The aged earth aghaſt,
With terrour of that blaſt,
Shall from the ſurface to the centre ſhake. Milton.

Aghaſt he wak'd, and, ſtarting from his bed,
Cold ſweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erſpread.
Dryden's Æneid.

I laugh to think how your unſhaken Cato
Will look aghaſt, while unforeſeen deſtruction
Pours in upon him thus from every ſide.
Addiſon's Cato.

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being ſpeedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horſe the head,
And bending forward ſtruck his agile heels
Againſt the panting ſides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

The immediate and agile ſubſervience of the ſpirits to the empire of the mind or ſoul.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, ſage,
As fits the various courſe of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. ſ. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleneſs; readineſs for motion; quickneſs; activity; agility.

AGI'LITY. n. ſ. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleneſs; readineſs to move; quickneſs; activity.

A limb ſtrained by lifting a weight above its ſtrength may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGILLOCHUM. n. ſ. Aloes-wood. A tree in the Eaſt-Indies, brought to us in ſmall bits, of a very fragrant ſcent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a ſtrengthener of the nerves in general. The beſt is of a blackiſh purple colour, and ſo light as to ſwim upon water. Quincy.

AGIO. n. ſ. [An Italian word, ſignifying caſe or conveniency.] A mercantile term, uſed chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money.
Chambers.

To AGI'ST. v. a. [from giſte, Fr. a bed or reſting-place, or from giſter, i. e. ſtabulari.] To take in and feed the cattle of ſtrangers in the king's foreſt, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agiſtors, in Engliſh, gueſt or giſt-takers. Their function is termed agiſtment; as, agiſtment upon the ſea-banks. This word agiſt is alſo uſed, for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week.] Blount.

AGI'STMENT. n. ſ. [See AGIST.] It is taken by the canon lawyers in another ſenſe than is mentioned under agiſt. They ſeem to intend by it, a modus or compoſition, or mean rate, at which ſome right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addoucciſſment, or adjuſtment.

AGI'STOR. n. ſ. [from agiſt.] An officer of the king's foreſt. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. adj. [from agitate: agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be diſputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to ſhake; to move nimbly; as, the ſurface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the veſſel was broken by agitating the liquor.

2. To be the cauſe of motion; to actuate; to move.

Where dwells this ſov'reign arbitrary ſoul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Inform each part, and agitate the whole? Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, the mind of man is agitated by various paſſions.

4. To ſtir; to bandy from one to another; to diſcuſs; to controvert; as, to agitate a queſtion.

Though this controverſy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal diſpute.
Boyle on Colours.

5. To contrive; to revolve; to form by laborious thought.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more ſtudied and elaborate, than when politicians moſt agitate deſperate deſigns. King Charles.

AGITA'TION. n. ſ. [from agitate; agitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of moving or ſhaking any thing.

Putrefaction aſketh reſt, for the ſubtle motion which putrefaction requireth, is diſturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The ſtate of being moved or agitated; as, the waters, after a ſtorm, are ſome time in a violent agitation.

3. Diſcuſſion; controverſial examination. A kind of a ſchool queſtion is ſtarted in this fable, upon reaſon and inſtinct; this deliberative proceeding of the crow, was rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; diſturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of ſleep, and do the effects of watching. In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking, and other actual performances, what have you heard her ſay? Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations of ſo many paſſions as thronged upon her.
Tatler, N° 55.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the ſtate of being conſulted upon.

The project now in agitation for repealing of the teſt act, and yet leaving the name of an eſtabliſhment to the preſent national church, is inconſiſtent. Swift's Miſcellanies.

AGITA'TOR. n. ſ. [from agitate.] He that agitates any thing; he who manages affairs: in which ſenſe ſeems to be uſed the agitators of the army.

A'GLET. n. ſ. [Some derive it from αἴγλη, ſplendour; but it is apparently to be deduced from aiguilette, Fr. a tag to a point, and that from acu, ſharp.]

1. A tag of a point curved into ſome repreſentation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain worth 200l. and his gown addreſſed with aglets, eſteemed worth 25l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old tract, and ne'er a tooth in her head.
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

2. The pendants at the ends of the chieves of flowers, as in tulips.

A'GMINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat.] Belonging to a troop. Dict.

AGNI'TION. n. ſ. [from agnitio, Lat.] Acknowledgment.

To AGNI'ZE. v. a. [from agnoſco, Lat.] To acknowledge; to own; to avow. This word is now obſolete.

I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardneſs. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

AGNOMINA'TION. n. ſ. [agnominatio, Lat.] Alluſion of one word to another, by reſemblance of ſound.

The Britiſh continueth yet in Wales, and ſome villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very ſignificative, copious, and pleaſantly running upon agnominations, although harſh in aſpirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chaſte Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preſerving chaſtity.

Of laurel ſome, of woodbine many more,
And wreathes of agnus caſtus others bore. Dryd.

AGO'. adv. [ꝛagan, Sax. paſt or gone; whence writers formerly uſed, and in ſome provinces the people ſtill uſe, agone for ago.] Paſt; as, long ago; that is, long long time has paſt ſince. Reckoning time towards the preſent, we uſe ſince; as, it is a year ſince it happened: reckoning from the preſent, we uſe ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always obſerved.

The great ſupply
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Godwin ſands.
Shakeſpeare.

This both by others and myſelf I know,
For I have ſerv'd their ſovereign long ago;
Oft have been caught within the winding train.
Dryden's Fables.

I ſhall ſet down an account of a diſcourſe I chanced to have with one of them ſome time ago.
Addiſon's Freeholder.

AGO'G. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology: the French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wiſh: from this phraſe our word may be, perhaps, derived.]

1. In a ſtate of deſire; in a ſtate of warm imagination; heated with the notion of ſome enjoyment; longing; ſtrongly excited.

As for the ſenſe and reaſon of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it ſound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at preſent agog (juſt as a big, long, rattling name is ſaid to command even adoration from a Spaniard), and, no doubt, with this powerful, ſenſeleſs engine, the rabble driver ſhall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is uſed with the verbs to be, or to ſet; as, he is agog, or you may ſet him agog.

The gawdy goſſip, when ſhe's ſet agog,
In jewels dreſt, and at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out, and, in her trim of pride,
Thinks all ſhe ſays or does is juſtify'd.
Dryd. Juv. Sat. vi.

This maggot has no ſooner ſet him agog, but he gets him a ſhip, freights her, builds caſtles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Eſtrange.

3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of deſire.

On which the ſaints we all agog,
And all this for a bear and dog. Hudibr. cant. ii.

Gypſies generally ſtraggle into theſe parts, and ſet the heads of our ſervant-maids to agog for huſbands, that we do not expect to have any buſineſs done as it ſhould be, whilſt they are in the country. Addiſon's Spectator.

AGO'ING. participial adj. [from a and going.] In action; into action.

Their firſt movement, and impreſſed motions, demanded the impulſe of an almighty hand to ſet them firſt going. Tatler.

1. The pangs of death; properly the laſt conteſt between life and death.

Never was there more pity in ſaving any than in ending me, becauſe therein my agony ſhall end.
Sidney.

Thou who for me did feel ſuch pain,
Whoſe precious blood the croſs did ſtain,
Let not thoſe agonies be vain. Roſcommon.

2. Any violent or exceſſive pain of body or mind.

Betwixt them both, they have me done to dy,
Thro' wounds and ſtrokes, and ſtubborn handeling,
That death were better than ſuch agony,
As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Queen.

Thee I have miſs'd; and thought it long, depriv'd
Thy preſence, agony of love! till now
Not felt, nor ſhall be twice. Milton's Par. Loſt.

3. It is particularly uſed in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propoſe our deſires, which cannot take ſuch effect as we ſpecify, ſhall, notwithſtanding, otherwiſe procure us his heavenly grace, even as this very prayer of Chriſt obtained angels to be ſent him as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

AGO'OD. adv. [a and good.] In earneſt; not fictitiouſly. Not in uſe.

At that time I made her weep agood,
For I did play a lamentable part.
Shakeſpeare's Two Gent. of Verona.

AGOU'TY. n. ſ. An animal of the Antilles, of the bigneſs of a rabbet, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair. He has but two teeth in each jaw, holds his meat in his fore-paws like a ſquirrel, and has a very remarkable cry. When he is angry, his hair ſtands on end, and he ſtrikes the earth with his hind-feet, and, when chaſed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by ſmoke. Trevoux.

To AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and grace.] To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon: a word not now in uſe.

5. To ſettle a price between buyer and ſeller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didſt not thou agree with me for a penny? Matt. xx. 13.

6. To be of the ſame mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius, and the world agrees to confeſs it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

7. To concur; to co-operate.

Muſt the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble and contracted urn?
And never ſhall thoſe particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

8. To ſettle ſome point among many, with upon before a noun.

Strifes and troubles would be endleſs, except they gave their common conſent all to be ordered by ſome whom they ſhould agree upon. Hooker.

If men, ſkilled in chymical affairs, ſhall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being ſtunned by dark or empty words, they will be reduced either to write nothing, or books that may teach us ſomething. Boyle.

9. To be conſiſtent; not to contradict: with to or with.

For many bare falſe witneſs againſt him, but their witneſs agreed not together. Mark, xiv. 56.

They that ſtood by ſaid again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto. Mark, xiv. 70.

Which teſtimony I the leſs ſcruple to allege becauſe it agrees very well with what has been affirmed to me. Boyle.

10. To ſuit with; to be accommodated to: with to or with.

Thou feedeſt thine own people with angels food and didſt ſend them from heaven bread agreeing to every taſte. Wiſdom.

His principles could not be made to agree with that conſtitution and order which God had ſettled in the world; and, therefore, muſt needs claſh with common ſenſe and experience. Locke.

11. To cauſe no diſturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our preſcribing aſſes milk in ſuch ſmall quantities, is injudicious; for undoubtedly, with ſuch as it agrees with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbuthnot.

To AGRE'E. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He ſaw from far, or ſeemed for to ſee,
Some troublous uproar, or contentious fray,
Whereto he drew in haſte it to agree.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whoſe deſtructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Roſcommon.

AGRE'EABLE. adj. [agréable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; conſiſtent with; conformable to. It has the particle to, or with.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals, as frogs, lizards, and other fiſhes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The delight which men have in popular fame, ſubmiſſion, and ſubjection of other men minds, ſeemeth to be a thing, in itſelf, without contemplation of conſequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory

What you do, is not at all agreeable either with ſo good a chriſtian, or ſo reaſonable and ſo great a perſon. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Eſtrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reaſon, ſo is it likewiſe the intereſt both of private perſons and of public ſocieties. Tillotſon.

2. In the following paſſage the adjective is uſed by a familiar corruption for the adverb agreeably.

Agreeable to eunto, perhaps it might not be amiſs, to make children, as ſoon as they are capable of it, often to tell a ſtory. Locke on Education.

3. Pleaſing; that is ſuitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is uſed in this ſenſe both of perſons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find
Pleaſant and fair, agreeable and ſweet,
Theſe things tranſport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the diſcourſes which have paſſed between us, and call to mind a thouſand agreeable remarks, which he has made on theſe occaſions. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 241.

AGRE'EABLENESS. n. ſ. [from agreeable.]

1. Conſiſtency with; ſuitableneſs to: with the particle to.

Pleaſant taſtes depend not on the things themſelves, but their agreeableneſs to this or that particular palate, wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleaſing. It is uſed in an inferiour ſenſe, to mark the production of ſatisfaction, calm and laſting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occaſion for largeneſs of mind and agreeableneſs of temper. Collier of Friendſhip.

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableneſs that charms us, without correctneſs; like a miſtreſs, whoſe faults we ſee, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Reſemblance; likeneſs; ſometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewiſe ſeen in the agreeableneſs between man and the other parts of the univerſe. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

AGRE'EABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

A'GRICULTURE. n. ſ. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground, tillage; huſbandry, as diſtinct from paſturage.

He ſtrictly adviſeth not to begin to ſow before the ſetting of the ſtars; which, notwithſtanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be obſerved in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

That there was tillage beſtowed upon the antediluvian ground, Moſes does indeed intimate in general; what ſort of tillage that was, is not expreſſed: I hope to ſhew that their agriculture was nothing near ſo laborious and troubleſome, nor did it take up ſo much time as ours doth. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

The diſpoſition of Ulyſſes inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more ſecure, method of life, by agriculture and huſbandry. Broome's Notes on the Odyſſey.

A'GRIMONY. n. ſ. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant. The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup conſiſts of one leaf, which is divided into five ſegments: the flowers have five or ſix leaves, and are formed into a long ſpike, which expand in form of a roſe; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which are contained two kernels. Miller.

To AGRI'SE. v. n. [agrypan, Sax.] To look terrible. Out of uſe. Spenſer.

To AGRI'SE. v. a. To terrify. Spenſer.

AGRO'UND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground from paſſing farther.

With our great ſhips, we durſt not approach the coaſt, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Say what you ſeek, and whither were you bound?
Were you, by ſtreſs of weather, caſt aground?
Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is likewiſe figuratively uſed, for being hindered in the progreſs of affairs; as, the negociators were aground at that objection.

A'GUE. n. ſ. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits ſucceeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our caſtle's ſtrength
Will laugh a ſiege to ſcorn. Here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakeſp.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,
Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That ſtill inclines to one extreme. Denham's Sophy.

A'GUED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; ſhivering; chill; cold: a word in little uſe.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With flight and agued fear! Shakſp. Coriolanus.

A'GUE FIT. n. ſ. [from ague and fit.] The paroxyſm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown. Shakſp. Rich. II.

A'GUE PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof againſt agues; able to reſiſt the cauſes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter, when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I ſmelt 'em out. They told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie, I am not ague proof. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

A'GUE-TREE. n. ſ. [from ague and tree.] A name ſometimes given to ſaſſafras. Dict.

To AGUI'SE. v. a. [from a and guiſe. See GUISE.] To dreſs; to adorn; to deck: a word now not in uſe.

As her fantaſtick wit did moſt delight,
Sometimes her head the fondly would aguiſe
With gaudy garlands, or freſh flowrets dight
About her neck, or rings of roſhy ſplight.
Fairy Queen.

A'GUISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and ſo ſerene, but now,
What means this change on Myra's brow?
Her aguiſh love now glows and burns,
Then chills and ſhakes, and the cold fit returns.
Granville.

A'GUISHNESS. n. ſ. [from aguiſh.] The quality of reſembling an ague.

AH Interjection.

1. A word noting ſometimes diſlike and cenſure.

Ah! ſinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters, they have forſaken the Lord. Iſaiah i. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not ſay in their hearts, Ah! ſo we would have it: let them not ſay, we have ſwallowed him up. Pſalm. xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and moſt frequently, compaſſion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliſs is fugitive.
Diſcolour'd ſickneſs, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom.
Dryd. Virg. Georg. iii.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty are but one.
At morn both flouriſh bright and gay,
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expreſſes vehement deſire.

In goodneſs, as in greatneſs, they excel;
Ah! that we lov'd ourſelves but half ſo well.
Dryden's Juvenal.

AHA'! AHA'! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said, aha! aha! our eye hath seen it.
Pſalm xxxv. 21.

AHE'AD. adv. [from a and head.]
1. Farther onward than another: a ſea term.
And now the mighty Centaur ſeems to lead,
And now the ſpeedy Dolphin gets ahead.
Dryden's Æneid.
2. Headlong; precipitantly: uſed of animals, and figuratively of men.
It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governours, that ſo many men miſcarry. They ſuffer them at firſt to run ahead, and, when perverſe inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them.
L'Eſtrange's Fables.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.
But have I fall'n or no?—
—From the dread ſummit of this chalky bourne!
Look up aheight, the ſhrill gorg'd lark ſo far
Cannot be ſeen or heard. Shakeſp. King Lear.

AHOUAI. n. ſ. The name of a poiſonous plant.

To AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to ſupport; to ſuccour.
Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid,
And him catching hold, him ſtrongly ſtaid
From drowning. Fairy Queen.
Neither ſhall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ſhips.
Maccabees, vi. 26.
By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that ſound as well as ſenſe perſuades.
Roſcommon.

AID. n. ſ. [from To aid.]
1. Help; ſupport.
The memory of uſeful things may receive conſiderable aid, if they are thrown into verſe.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
Your patrimonial ſtores in peace purſues;
Undaunted all your ſtrength in conſels:
You private right through impious power invade,
The pieces of Lycia would aim in aid. Pope's Od.
2. The perſon that gives help or ſupport; a helper; auxiliary.
The holy ſcripture ſaith, it is not good that man ſhould be alone, let us make unto him an aid, like unto himſelf. Hooker, viii. 6.
Great aids came in to him, partly upon malice, and partly voluntaries from many parts.
Bacon's Henry VII.
3. In law.
A ſubſidy. Aid is alſo particularly uſed, in matters of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an intereſt in the cauſe in queſtion; and is likewiſe both to give ſtrength to the party that prays in aid of him, and alſo to avoid a prejudice accruing towards his own right, except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, courteſy, &c. being impleaded touching his eſtate, he may pray in aid of him in the reverſion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowell.

AI'DANCE. n. ſ. [from aid.] Help; ſupport: a word little uſed.
Oft have I ſeen a timely parted ghoſt,
Of aſhy ſemblance, meagre, pale, and bloodleſs,
Being all deſcended to the labouring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame for aidance 'gainſt the enemy.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

AI'DANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful: not in uſe.
All you unpubliſh'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's diſtreſs. Shakeſp. King Lear.

AI'DER. n. ſ. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.
All along as he went, were puniſhed the adherents and aiders of the late rebels.
Bacon's Henry VII.

AI'DLESS. adj. [from aid and leſs, an inſeparable particle.] Helpleſs; unſupported; undefended.
Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' th' city, which he painted
With ſhunleſs deſtiny: aidleſs came off,
And, with a ſudden re-enforcement, ſtruck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
He had met
Already, ere my beſt ſpeed could prevent,
The aidleſs innocent lady, his wiſh'd prey.
Milton's Comus.

A'IGULET. n. ſ. [aigulet, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.
It all above beſprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets that gliſten'd bright,
Like twinkling ſtars, and all the ſkirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen.

To AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troubleſome.]
1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.
And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and ſaid unto her, What ails thee, Hagar? fear not: for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Gen. xxi. 17.
2. It is uſed in a ſenſe leſs determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, ſomething ails me that I cannot ſit ſtill; what ails the man that he laughs without reaſon?
Love ſmiled, and thus ſaid, Want joined to deſire is unhappy; but if he nought do deſire, what can Heraclitus ail? Sidney.
What ails me, that I cannot loſe thy thought!
Command the empreſs hither to be brought,
I, in her death, ſhall ſome diverſion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.
3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.
4. It is remarkable, that this word is never uſed but with ſome indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails ſomething; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never ſay, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or uſe definite terms with this verb.

AIL. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A diſeaſe.
Oh heal, O Naiſe, thy abſence ails. Pope.

AI'LMENT. n. ſ. [from ail.] Pain; diſeaſe.
Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not deem'd for a huſband's eye or ear. Granville.
I am never ill, but I think of you: a fever and repine that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift's Letters.

A'ILING. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To AIM. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from eſtimer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]
1. To endeavour to hit: with a miſſive weapon; to direct towards; with the particle at.
Aim'ſt thou at princes, all amaz'd they ſtood,
The lad of game? Dryden's Ovid.
2. To point the view, or direct the ſteps towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain: with to formerly, now only with at.
Lo, here the world is thine; ſo here the end
To which all men do aim, rich to be made,
Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid.
Fairy Queen.
Another kind there is, which although we deſire for itſelf, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheleſs they are not the laſt mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are referred. Hooker.
Swoln with applauſe, and aiming ſtill at more,
He now provokes the ſea-gods from the ſhore.
Dryden's Æneid.
Religion tends to the eaſe and pleaſure, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wiſdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmoſt felicity of this life. Tillotſon.
3. To gueſs.

To AIM. v. a. To direct the miſſile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its diſmiſſion from the hand.
And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who ſhakes his empty reins, and aims his airy ſpear. Dryden.

AIM. n. ſ. [from the verb.]
1. The direction of a miſſile weapon.
Aſcanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting ſides. Dryden, Æn. viii. l. 691.
2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.
That arrows fled not ſwifter toward their aim,
Than did our ſoldiers, aiming at their ſafety,
Fly from the field. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.
3. In a figurative ſenſe, a purpoſe; a ſcheme; an intention; a deſign.
He truſted to have equall'd the Moſt High,
If he oppoſ'd; and, with ambitious aim,
Againſt the throne and monarchy of God
Rais'd impious war. Milt. Par. Loſt, b. i. l. 41.
But ſee how oft ambitious aims are croſt,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is loſt. Pope.
4. The object of a deſign; the thing after which any one endeavours.
The ſafeſt way is to ſuppoſe, that the epiſtle has but one aim, till, by a frequent peruſal of it, you are forced to ſee there are diſtinct independent parts. Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.
5. Conjecture; gueſs.
It is impoſſible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenſer on Ireland.
There is a hiſtory in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which obſerv'd, a man may proſphely
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which in their ſeeds
And weak beginnings lie intereſted. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

AIR. n. ſ. [air, Fr. aër, Lat.]
1. The element encompaſſing the terraqueous globe.
If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I muſt ſay, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually; or it is that thin fluid body in which the bird flies, a little above the earth, or it is that inviſible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompaſſes the globe of earth and water.
Watts's Logick.
2. The ſtate of the air; or, the air conſidered with regard to health.
There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in ſmell from other airs.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 904.
3. Air in motion; a ſmall gentle wind.
Freſh gales, and gentle airs,
Whiſper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung roſe, flung odours from the ſpicy ſhrub
Diſporting! Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. viii. l. 515.

But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death.
Dryden.

Let mutual airs through trembling osiers play,
And Albion's cliffs resound the rural lay.
Pope's Pastorals.

4. Scent; vapour.

Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not the most pernicious, but such airs as have some similitude with man's body; and so insinuate themselves, and betray the spirits. Bacon.

5. Blast; pestilential vapour.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness! Shak. King Lear.

6. Any thing light or uncertain; that is as light as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with ev'ry nod to tumble down.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

7. The open weather; air unconfined.

The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.
Dryden's Fables.

8. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.

I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime.
Dryden.

9. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.

I am sorry to find it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers. Pope's Letters.

10. Intelligence; information. This is not now in use.

It grew from the airs which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. Musick, whether light or serious; sound; air modulated.

This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion,
With its sweet air. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Call in some musick; I have heard, soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares.
Denham's Sophy.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune.
Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

Since we have such a treasury of words so proper for the airs of musick, I wonder that persons should give so little attention.
Addison, Spectator, N° 406.

Borne on the swelling notes, our souls aspire,
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire;
And angels lean from heav'n to hear!
Pope's St. Cæcilia.

—When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in enliv'ning airs! Pope's St. Cæcilia.

12. Poetry; a song.

The repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the pow'r
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.
Paradise Regained.

13. The mien, or manner, of the person; the look.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood shall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down; and last consume
The balm of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But, having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit those airs and features, which they have missed.
Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

There is something wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addison on Italy.

Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

14. An affected or laboured manner or gesture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular.
Dryden's Æneid, vi.

There are of these sort of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the different airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object, some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of state, and they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs. Pope.

He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs; he conceives himself a being of a superiour nature. Swift.

15. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world.
Pope's Ded. to Rape of the Lock.

16. [In horsemanship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a managed horse. Chambers.

To AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expose to the air; to open to the air.

The others make it a matter of small commendation in itself, if they, who wear it, do nothing else but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture, or the chamber and bed-straw kept close, and not aired.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 696.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that sat upon the jail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died. Therefore, it were good wisdom, that, in such cases, the jail were aired, before they were brought forth. Bacon's Natural History, N° 514

As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grasshopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Estrange's Fables.

Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gratify, by enjoying the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, stay a little——
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addison, Spectator.

3. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire: a term used in conversation.

4. To breed in nests. In this sense, it is derived from aerie, a nest. It is now out of use.

You may add their busy, dangerous, discourteous, yea and sometimes despiteful stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good housewives chickens in a country.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

A'IRBLADDER. n. s. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or vesicle filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fishes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.

Though the airbladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed as to swim without it. Cudworth.

A'IRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any solid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The airbuilt castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame.
Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

AIR-DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air: a word not used.

This is the very painting of your fear,
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. Shakesp. Macbeth.

A'IRER. n. s. [from To air.] He that exposes to the air.

A'IRHOLE. n. s. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

A'IRINESS. n. s. [from airy.]

1. Openness; exposure to the air.

2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make classick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Felton.

A'IRING. n. s. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer season. Addison.

A'IRLESS. adj. [from air.] Wanting communication with the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

A'IRLING. n. s. [from air, for gayety.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, flight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore.
Ben Jonson.

A'IRPUMP. n. s. [from air and pump.] A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the waterpump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guerick, consul of Magdebourg, in 1654. But his machine laboured under several defects; the force necessary to work it was very great, and the progress very slow; it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several inconveniencies; though, still, the working was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction. This labour has been since removed moved by Mr. Hawkſbee; who, by adding a ſecond barrel and piſton, to riſe as the other fell, and fall as it roſe, made the preſſure of the atmoſphere on the deſcending one, of as much ſervice as it was of diſſervice in the aſcending one. Vream made a further improvement, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

The air that, in exhauſted receivers of airpumps, is exhaled from minerals, and fleſh, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine as to elaſticity and denſity, or rarefaction, as that we reſpire in; and yet this factitious air is ſo far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even ſooner than the abſence of air, or a vacuum itſelf. Bentley.

A'IRSHAFT. n. ſ. [from air and ſhaft.] A paſſage for the air into mines and ſubterraneous places.

By the ſinking of an airſhaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the ſteams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwiſe ſtagnate there. Ray.

A'IRY. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.]

1. Compoſed of air.

The firſt is the tranſmiſſion, or emiſſion, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the reſt, the moſt corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fiſhes that have wings, that are no ſtrangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air.

Whole rivers here forſake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channel flow. Addiſon.

4. Open to the free air.

Jov'd to range abroad in freſh attire
Thro' the wide compaſs of the airy coaſt. Spenſer.

5. Light as air; thin; unſubſtantial; without ſolidity.

I hold ambition of ſo airy and light a quality, that it is but a ſhadow's ſhadow. Shakſp. Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghoſts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

6. Wanting reality; having no ſteady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Not think with wind
Of airy threats to awe, whom yet with deeds
Thou can'ſt not. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Nor (to avoid ſuch meanneſs) ſoaring high,
With empty ſound, and airy notions, fly.
Roſcommon.

I have found a complaint concerning the ſcarcity of money, which occaſioned many airy propoſitions for the remedy of it. Temple's Miſcellanies.

7. Fluttering; looſe; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reſerved for queens and goddeſſes. Dryden.

By this name of ladies, he means all young perſons, ſlender, finely ſhaped, airy, and delicate: ſuch as are nymphs and Naiads. Dryden.

8. Gay; ſprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; ſpirited; light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at ſhore when he ſees a ſad tempeſt on the ſea, or dances when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God ſpeaks to all the world. Taylor.

AISLE. n. ſ. [Thus the word is written by Addiſon, but perhaps improperly; ſince it ſeems deducible only from, either aile, a wing, or allée, a path, and is therefore to be written aile.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means ſo magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aiſle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addiſon.

AIT, or EYGHT. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from iſlet.] A ſmall iſland in a river.

AJUTAGE. n. ſ. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to water-works. Dict.

To AKE. v. n. [from ἄχος, Gr. and therefore more grammatically written ache.]

1. To feel a laſting pain, generally of the internal parts; diſtinguiſhed from ſmart, which is commonly uſed of uneaſineſs in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To ſue, and be deny'd, ſuch common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakſpeare.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a ſenſe
Of pain. Shakeſpeare.

Were the pleaſure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that ſick ſtomach and aking head, which, in ſome men, are ſure to follow, I think no body would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

His limbs muſt ake, with daily toils oppreſt,
Ere long-wiſh'd night brings neceſſary reſt. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper ſenſe, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakeſpeare has uſed it, ſtill more licentiouſly, of the ſoul.

My ſoul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither ſupreme, how ſoon confuſion
May enter. Shakeſp. Coriolanus

Here ſhame diſſuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart aſſails.
Addiſon.

AKI'N. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied by blood: uſed of perſons.

I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wiſh, that being thy ſiſter in nature, I were not ſo far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the ſame properties: uſed of things.

The cankered paſſion of envy is nothing akin to the filly envy of the aſs. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Some limbs again in bulk or ſtature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Becauſe one ſerves the other's ends. Prior.

He ſeparates it from queſtions with which it may have been complicated, and diſtinguiſhes it from queſtions which may be akin to it.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, do all ſeem to be corruptions of the Saxon Æpel, noble, famous; as alſo, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of Æpeling. noble, ſplendid, famous.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealb, ancient; and ſo, oftentimes, the initial all, being melted by the Normans from the Saxon ealb.
Gibſon's Camden.

A'LABASTER. n. ſ. [ἀλάβαστρον.] A kind of ſoft marble, eaſier to cut, and leſs durable, than the other kinds; ſome is white, which is moſt common; ſome of the colour of horn, and tranſparent; ſome yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients uſed it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not ſhed her blood,
Nor ſcar that whiter ſkin of hers than ſnow,
And ſmooth as monumental alabaſter. Shakſp.

A'LABASTER, adj. Made of alabaſter.

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaſter column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be ſeen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the ſhape of a croſs, in a hole of the wall; ſo that the light paſſing through it, makes it look, to thoſe in the church, like a huge tranſparent croſs of amber.
Addiſon on Italy.

ALA'CK. interject. [This word ſeems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expreſſion of ſorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.
Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

At thunder now no more I ſtart,
Than at the rumbling of a cart;
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALA'CKADAY. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting ſorrow and melancholy.

ALA'CRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrious, ſuppoſed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrious I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriouſly expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country.
Government of the Tongue.

ALA'CRITY. n. ſ. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulneſs, expreſſed by ſome outward token; ſprightlineſs; gayety; livelineſs; cheerful willingneſs.

Theſe orders were, on all ſides, yielded unto with no leſs alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to ſhew when they take conditions, ſuch as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow ſtraits of advantage. Hooker.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of ſpirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.
Shakeſpeare.

He, glad that now his ſea ſhould find a ſhore,
With freſh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to fly;
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praiſe them, all the ſtates ſtood by.
Dryden.

I e only, with the prince his couſin, were caſt aland, far off from the place whither their deſires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Daſh'd on the ſhallows of the moving ſand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland.
Dryden.

ALA'RM. n. ſ. [from the French à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are ſummoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow, but you ſhall not ſound an alarm. Numbers.

God

God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarm against you. 2 Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Taught by this stroke, renounce the wars alarms,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms.
Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.

ALA'RM-POST. n. s. [from alarm and post.] The post or place appointed to each body of men to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALA'RUM. n. s. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
Our stern alarums changed to merry meetings.
Shakespeare.

That Almatro might better bear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarums which they beat. Prior.

To ALA'RUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm.] See ALARM.

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus with his stealthy pace
Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare.

ALA'S. interject. [helas, Fr. eylaes, Dutch.]

Alas, how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preserv'st a form, and I a name. Pope.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.

Alas! poor Prothens, thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs. Shakesp.

3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thus saith the Lord God, Smite with thine hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel. Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause! Milton.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Piteous indeed must be, when I, a spirit,
Can have so soft a sense of human woes. Dryden.

ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas the day! I never gave him cause. Shakesp.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor mistress: you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if she make it up with her husband? Congreve.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah! unhappy time!

Alas the sheep, such was the shepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was (alas the while!)
May seem he lov'd, or else some care he took.
Spenser.

To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchymist,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glistering gold.
Shakesp. King John.

Every alchymist knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time without any change; and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear in its own form. Grew.

A'LCHYMY. n. s. [of al, Arab. and χυμεια.]

1. The more sublime and occult part of chymistry, which proposes for its object the transmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this deluding art, which changeth the species of words, as alchymy, details, or would do the substance of metals, maketh of any thing what it listeth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Ascham.

One jot he has in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Diſt.

ALE'CTRYOMANCY, or ALE'CTOROMANCY. n. ſ. [ἀλεκτρυὼν and μάντις.] Divination by a cock. Diſt.

A'LEGAR. n. ſ. [from ale and eager, ſour.] Sour ale; a kind of acid made by ale, as vinegar by wine, which has loſt its ſpirit.

A'LEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay: chearful; ſprightly: a word not now uſed.

Coffee, the root and leaf of the, and leaf tobacco of which the Turk in part takes, do all conduce the ſpirit, and make them ſtrong and aleger.
Evelyn's Natural Hiſtory.

A'LEHOOF. n. ſ. [from ale and hoof, head.] Ground-ivy, ſo called by our Saxon anceſtors, as being then chief ingredient in ale. An herb.

Ale-hoof, or ground-ivy, is in my opinion, of the moſt excellent and moſt general uſe and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'LEHOUSE. n. ſ. [from ale and houſe.] A houſe where ale is publickly ſold; a tipling-houſe. It is diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, where they ſell wine.

Thou moſt beauteous inn,
Why ſhould hunt triumph be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouſe gueſt?
Shakeſpeare.

One would think it ſhould be no eaſy matter to bring any man of ſenſe in love with an alehouſe, indeed of ſo much ſenſe as ſeeing and ſmelling amounts to; there being ſuch ſtrong counterſcouts to both, as would quickly ſend him packing, did not the love of good fellowſhip reconcile to their nuiſances. South.

Thee ſhall each alehouſe, thee each gilthouſe mourn,
And anſw'ring ginſhops ſourer ſighs return. Pope.

A'LEHOUSE-KEEPER. n. ſ. [from alehouſe and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to ſell.

You reſemble perfectly the two alehouſe keepers in Holland, who were at the ſame time burgomaſters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Letter to Swift.

A'LEKNIGHT. n. ſ. [from ale and knight.] A pot-companion; a tippler; a word now out of uſe.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted by Hanvilie, in the alehouſe-colours of that time. Camden.

ALE'MBICK. n. ſ. A veſſel uſed in diſtilling, conſiſting of a veſſel placed over a fire, in which is contained the ſubſtance to be diſtilled, and a concave cloſely fitted on, into which the fumes ariſe by the heat; this cover has a beak or ſpout, into which the vapours riſe, and by which they paſs into a ſerpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condenſed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied into inviſible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only ſcattered into minute parts; which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do preſently return into ſuch water as they conſtituted before. Boyle.

ALE'NGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; ſtretched along the ground.

ALE'RT. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris, but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military ſenſe, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.

2. In the common ſenſe, briſk; pert; petulant; ſmart; implying ſome degree of cenſure and contempt.

I ſaw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accoſted him, Well, Jack, the old pug is dead at laſt.
Addiſon, Spectator.

ALE'RTNESS. n. ſ. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; ſprightlineſs; pertneſs.

That alertneſs and unconcern for matters of common life, a campaign or two would infallibly have given him. Addiſon, Spectator.

A'LETASTER. n. ſ. [from ale and taſter.] An officer appointed in every court leet, and ſworn to look to the aſſize and the goodneſs of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordſhip. Cowell.

A'LEVAT. n. ſ. [from ale and vat.] The tub in which the ale is fermented.

A'LEW. n. ſ. Clamour; outcry. Not in uſe. Spenſer.

A'LEWASHED. adj. [from ale and waſh.] Steeped or ſoaked in ale: not now in uſe.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid ſuit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles and alewaſhed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakeſpeare.

A'LEWIFE. n. ſ. [from ale and wife.] A woman that keeps an alehouſe.

Perhaps.

Perhaps he will ſwagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alewife, or take the goods by force, and throw them down the bad halfpence. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

A'LEXANDERS. n. ſ. [ſmyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

A'LEXANDER'S-FOOT. n. ſ. The name of an herb.

ALEXA'NDRINE. n. ſ. A kind of verſe borrowed from the French, firſt uſed in a poem called Alexander. They conſiſt, among the French, of twelve and thirteen ſyllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers ſhould, for the moſt part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majeſty of thought requires it, they may be ſtretched to the Engliſh heroic of five feet, and to the French Alexandrine of ſix. Dryden.

Then, at the laſt and only couplet, fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags its ſlow length along. Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

ALEXIPHA'RMICK. adj. [from ἀλεξίω and φάρμακον.] That which drives away poiſon; antidotal; that which oppoſes infection.

Some antidotal quality it may have, ſince not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RICK. adj. [from ἀλεξίω.] That which drives away poiſon; that which reſiſts fevers.

A'LGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the ſame as via; and ſtill uſed for way in the Scottiſh dialect.] On any terms; every way: now obſolete.

Nor had the boaſter ever riſen more,
But that Renaldo's horſe ev'n then down fell,
And with the fall his leg oppreſs'd ſo ſore,
That, for a ſpace, there muſt he algates dwell.
Fairfax.

A'LGEBRA. n. ſ. [an Arabic word of uncertain etymology; derived, by ſome, from Geber the philoſopher; by ſome, from gefr, parchment; by others, from algebiſta, a boneſetter; by Menage, from algiabarat, the reſtitution of things broken.] A peculiar kind of arithmetick, which takes the quantity ſought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity at firſt only ſuppoſed to be known, or at leaſt ſome power thereof, is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities which are known, and conſequently itſelf is known. This art was in uſe among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world; and they are ſuppoſed to have borrowed it from the Perſians, and the Perſians from the Indians. The firſt Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1494, Lucas Pacciolus, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatiſe of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He ſays, that algebra came originally from the Arabs. After ſeveral improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Delcartes, Sir Iſaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it ſtill continues. Trevoux. Chambers.

It would ſurely require no very profound ſkill in algebra, to reduce the difference of ninepence in thirty ſhillings. Swift.

ALGEBRA'ICK. } adj. [from algebra.]
ALGEBRA'ICAL. }

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatiſe.
2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRA'IST. n. ſ. [from algebra.] A perſon that underſtands or practiſes the ſcience of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt or uncipherer can uſe more ſubtle ſuppoſitions, to find the demonſtration or cipher, than every unconcerned perſon doth to find the murderers. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Confining themſelves to the ſynthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraiſts, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

ALGI'DITY. } n. ſ. [from algid.] Chil-
A'LGIDNESS. } neſs; cold. Dict.

ALGI'FIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That which produces cold. Dict.

A'LGOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilneſs. Dict.

A'LGORISM. } n. ſ. Arabick words,
A'LGORITHM. } which are uſed to imply the ſix operations of arithmetick, or the ſcience of numbers. Dict.

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

A'LIAS. adv. A Latin word, ſignifying otherwiſe; often uſed in the trials of criminals, whoſe danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simſon, alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwiſe Smith, otherwiſe Baker.

A'LIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nouriſhing; or that which may be nouriſhed. Dict.

A'LIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the ſame family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.

From native ſoil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of his young guiltleſs progeny, he ſeeks
Inglorious ſhelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Eſtranged from; not allied to; adverſe to: with the particle from, and ſometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the diſciples of the fire, by a ſimilitude not alien from their profeſſion. Boyle.

The ſentiment that ariſes, is a conviction of the deplorable ſtate of nature, to which ſin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodneſs, and a prey to the great deſtroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged perſons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to ſtrengthen their faction. Swift's Miſcellanies.

A'LIEN. n. ſ. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a deniſon; a man of another country or family; one not allied; a ſtranger.

In whomſoever theſe things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only ſhe holdeth for aliens and ſtrangers in whom theſe things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd againſt an alien,
He ſeeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainſt the which he doth contrive,
Shall ſeize on half his goods.
Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

The mere Iriſh were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, ſo as it was no capital offence to kill them. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'd,
And art almoſt an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood.
Shakeſpeare.

The lawgiver condemned the perſons, who ſat idle in diviſions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addiſon, Freeholder.

2. In law.

An alien is one born in a ſtrange country, and never enfranchiſed. A man born out of the land, ſo it be within the limits beyond the ſeas, or of Engliſh parents out of the king's obedience, ſo the parents, at the time of the birth, be of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one, born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but deniſons. Cowell.

To A'LIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the ſon alien lands, and then repurchaſe them again in fee, the rules of deſcents are to be obſerved, as if he were the original purchaſer. Hale's Hiſtory of Common Law.

2. To eſtrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averſe: with from.

The king was diſquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

A'LIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treaſure is tranſitory, and both muſt paſs from him, by his own voluntary act, or by the violence of others, or at leaſt by fate. Dennis's Letters.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries of the Turks were once Chriſtian, and members of the church, and where the golden candleſticks did ſtand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no Chriſtians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections: with the particle from, where the firſt poſſeſſor is mentioned.

The manner of men's writing muſt not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes ſurvey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Any thing that is apt to diſturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, ſuch as croſs and diſtaſteful humours, is either expreſsly, or by clear conſequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Teſtament. Tillotſon.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honeſt Caſtilian, whom ſhe was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Addiſon.

A'LIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; ſtranger to: with the particle from.

The Whigs are damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition ambition and revenge by all desperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conscience, or honour. Swift's Miscellanies.

ALIENA'TION. n. f. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property.

This ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their posterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto strangers. Spenser's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to sacrilege. Her successour passed a law, which prevented all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift on Athens and Rome.

2. The state of being alienated; as, the state was wasted during its alienation.

3. Change of affection.

It is left but in dark memory, what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

4. Applied to the mind, it means disorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulsion, though not against, yet without their wills; as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter absence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. Dict.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lie down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to subdue: an old word even in the time of Spenser, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why sitten we so,
As weren overwent with woe,
Upon so fair a morrow?
The joyous time now nigheth fast,
That shall aligge this bitter blast,
And slake the winter sorrow.
Spenser's Pastorals.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [ahlitan, Sax. af-lichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of descending; as, of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horse or carriage; and generally of resting or stopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

There is alighted at your gate
A young Venetian. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Slackness breeds worms; but the sure traveller, Though he alights sometimes, still goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night; When with his horse, he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
To the Cumean coast at length he came,
And here alighting built this costly frame.
Dryden's Æneid.

When he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down gently, and circling in the air, and singing to the ground. Like a lark melodious in her mounting, and continuing her song till she alights; still preparing for a higher flight at her next sally. Dryden.

When finish'd was the fight,
The victors from their lusty steeds alight;
Like them dismounted all the warlike train. Dryden.

Should a spirit of superiour rank, a stranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addison, Spectator.

2. It is used also of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But storms of stones from the proud temple's height
Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight. Dryden.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner; in the same form. In some expressions it has the appearance of an adjective, but is always an adverb.

The darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Psalm cxxxix. 12.

With thee conversing, I forget all time;
All seasons, and their change, all please alike.
Paradise Lost.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave.
Dryden.

Let us unite at least in an equal zeal for those capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne; alike in place,
But differing far in figure and in face. Pope.

A'LIMENT. n. f. [alimentum, Lat.] Nourishment; that which nourishes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added to our substance; and, as we die, we are born daily: nor can we give an account, how the aliment is prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is distributed.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and solids of our bodies, are called aliments. In the largest sense, by aliment, I understand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and seasoning, as, salt, spice, vinegar. Arbuthnot.

ALIME'NTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment; that which nourishes; that which feeds.

The sun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompense,
In humid exhalations. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Except they be watered from higher regions, these weeds must lose their alimental sap, and wither. Brown.

Th' industrious, when the sun in Leo rides,
Forget not, at the foot of every plant,
To sink a circling trench, and daily pour
A just supply of alimental streams,
Exhausted sap recruiting. Philips.

ALIME'NTALLY. adv. [from alimental.] So as to serve for nourishment.

The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfullest heat, and that not only alimentally in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conversion. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ALIME'NTARINESS. n. f. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nourishment. Dict.

ALIME'NTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That which belongs or relates to aliment.

The solution of the aliment by mastication is necessary; without it, the aliment could not be disposed for the changes which it receives as it passeth through the alimentary duct.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nourishing.

I do not think that water supplies animals, or even plants, with nourishment, but serves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and distribute them to the several parts of the body.
Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, some are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turnips and carrots. These have a fattening quality. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTA'TION. n. f. [from aliment.]

1. The power of affording aliment; the quality of nourishing.

2. The state of being nourished by assimilation of matter received.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation.
Bacon's Natural History.

ALIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from alimony.] That which nourishes: a word very little in use.

The plethora renders us lean, by suppressing our spirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digesting the alimonious humours into flesh.
Harvey on Consumptions.

A'LIMONY. n. f. [alimonia, Lat.] Alimony signifies that legal proportion of the husband's estate, which, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parerg.

Before they settled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras.

A'LIQUANT. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as, 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

A'LIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

A'LISH. adj. [from ale.] Resembling ale; having qualities of ale.

Stirring it and beating down the yeast, gives it the sweet alish taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'LITURE. n. f. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALI'VE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear. Dryden.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive.
Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker.

3. Cheerful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours. Clarissa.

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis. This sense has been long in use, and was once admitted into serious writings, but is now merely ludicrous.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise loyal men,
And unto battle do yourselves address;
For yonder comes the prowest knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobleness.
Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure. Clarendon.

John was quick and understood business, but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot.

A'LIXANDRIST. n. f. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or liquor which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALE'SCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkalescent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot.

A'LKALI. n. s. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us, glasswort. This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt; this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments.] Any substance which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation.

A'LKALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquor will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from an alkaline state. People have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

To ALKA'LIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKA'LIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali; that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizate salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets in their syrup, by acid liquors, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton.

ALKALIZA'TION. n. s. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

A'LKANET. n. s. [anchusa, Lat.] The name of a plant. This plant is a species of buglos, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. Miller.

ALKEKE'NGI. n. s. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry: the plant bears a near resemblance to Solanum, or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES. n. s. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are pippin-cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, musk, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpelier. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found so plentifully as there. Chambers.

ALL. adj. [Æll, Æal, ealle, alle, Sax. oll, Welsh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. ὅλος, Gr.]

1. Being the whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men.
Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

To graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Tillotson.

2. Being the whole quantity; every part.

Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work. Deut. v. 13.

Political power, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the public good. Locke.

3. The whole quantity, applied to duration of time.

On those pastures cheerful spring
All the year doth sit and sing;
And, rejoicing, smiles to see
Their green backs wear his livery. Crashaw.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come.
Spenser.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight
Within Corioli gates. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He swore so loud,
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book.
Shakespeare.

The Saxons could call a comet a fixed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.
Camden's Remains.

For a large conscience is all one,
And signifies the same with none. Hudibras.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.

Justice may be furnished out of fire, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be all over a continued blaze. Addison.

If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,
He thinly spreads them through the public square,
Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,
And from each other catch the doleful cry. Gay.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryden.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure I shall never marry like my sister,
To love my father all. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonick, but now obsolete.

Do you not think th' accomplishment of it
Sufficient work for one man's simple head,
All were it as the rest but simply writ. Spenser.

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,
All as his straying flock he fed;
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardyhead.
Spenser's Pastorals.

6. It was anciently in English what it is now in the other Teutonick dialects, a particle of mere enforcement.

He thought them sixpence all too dear.
Song in Shakespeare.

Tell us what occasion of import
Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife.
Shakespeare.

ALL. n. s.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me;
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
Shakespeare.

Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The youth shall study, and no more engage
Their flattering wishes for uncertain age;
No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,
Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;
Finding the wretched all they here can have,
But present food, and but a future grave. Prior.

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison.

2. Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd.—All the better; we shall be the more remarkable.
Shakespeare.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that.
Shakespeare.

All the fitter, Lentulus: our coming
Is not for salutation; we have business.
Ben Jonson.

3. That is, every thing is the better, the same, the fitter.

Sceptre and pow'r, thy giving, I assume;
And glad her shall resign, when in the end
Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'st.
Milton.

They that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look through false glasses. Locke.

4. The phrase and all is of the same kind.

They all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground, nest, eagles, and all. L'Estrange.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

5. All is much used in composition; but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and classical; as, Almighty. When it is connected with a participle, it seems to be a noun; as, all-surrounding: in other cases an adverb; as, all-accomplished, or completely accomplished. Of these compounds, a small part of those which may be found is inserted.

ALL-BEARING. adj. [from all and bear.] That which bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew,
Where on th' all-bearing earth unmark'd it grew.
Pope.

ALL-CHEERING. adj. [from all and cheer.] That which gives gayety and cheerfulness to all.

Soon as the all-cheering sun
Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed. Shakesp.

ALL-COMMANDING. adj. [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.

He now ſets before them the high and ſhining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh.

ALL-COMPOSING. adj. [from all and compoſe.] That which quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring ſhades, Ulyſſes lies,
His woes forgot! but Pallas now addreſt,
To break the bands of all-compoſing reſt. Pope.

ALL-CONQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That which ſubdues every thing.

Second of Satan ſprung, all-conquering death!
What think'ſt thou of our empire now? Milton.

ALL-CONSUMING. adj. [from all and conſume.] That which conſumes every thing.

By age unbroke—but all-conſuming care
Deſtroys perhaps the ſtrength that time would ſpare. Pope.

ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That which eats up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Deſtructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope.

ALL-FOURS. n. ſ. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two; ſo named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are ſaid to make all-fours.

ALL HAIL. n. ſ. [from all and hail, for health.] All health. This is therefore not a compound, though perhaps uſually reckoned among them; a term of ſalutation. Salve, or ſalvete.

All hail, ye fields, where conſtant peace attends!
All hail, ye ſacred, ſolitary groves!
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whoſe converſation pleaſes and improves! Walſh.

ALL HALLOW. } n. ſ. [from all and hal-
ALL HALLOWS. } low.] All ſaints day; the firſt of November.

ALL-HALLOWN. adj. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time about All ſaints day.

Farewell, thou latter ſpring! farewell,
All-hallowen ſummer. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

ALLHALLOWTIDE. n. ſ. [See ALL-HALLOWN.] The term near All ſaints, or the firſt of November.

Cut off the bough about Allhallowtide, in the bare place, and ſet it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

ALL-HEAL. n. ſ. [panax, Lat.] A ſpecies of ironwort; which ſee.

ALL-JUDGING. adj. [from all and judge.] That which has the ſovereign right of judgment.

I look with horrour back,
That I deteſt my wretched ſelf, and curſe
My paſt polluted life. All judging Heaven,
Who knows my crimes, has ſeen my ſorrow for them. Rowe's Jane Shore.

ALL-KNOWING. adj. [from all and know.] Omniſcient; all-wiſe.

Shall we repine at a little miſplaced charity, we, who could no way foreſee the effect; when an all-knowing, all-wiſe Being, ſhowers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeſerving? Atterbury's Sermons.

ALL-MAKING. adj. [from all and make.] That created all; omnifick. See ALL-SEEING.

ALL-POWERFUL, adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent; poſſeſſed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being! the leaſt motion of whoſe will can create or deſtroy a world; pity us, the mournful friends of thy diſtreſſed ſervant. Swift.

ALL SAINTS DAY. n. ſ. The day on which there is a general celebration of the ſaints. The firſt of November.

ALL-SEER, n. ſ. [from all and ſee.] He that ſees or beholds every thing; he whoſe view comprehends all things.

That high All-ſeer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earneſt what I begg'd in jeſt. Shakeſpeare.

ALL-SEEING. adj. [from all and ſee.] That beholds every thing.

The ſame Firſt Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long thoſe perithable forms ſhall laſt;
Nor can they laſt beyond the time aſſign'd
By that all-ſeeing and all-making mind. Dryden.

ALL SOULS DAY. n. ſ. The day on which ſupplications are made for all ſouls by the church of Rome; the ſecond of November.

This is all ſouls day, fellows, is it not?—
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all ſouls day is my body's doomſday. Shakeſpeare.

ALL-SUFFICIENT. adj. [from all and ſufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The teſtimonies of God are perfect, the teſtimonies of God are all-ſufficient unto that end for which they were given. Hooker.

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmoſt elevation; for he is every way perfect and all-ſufficient. Norris.

ALL-WISE. adj. [from all and wiſe.] Poſſeſſ of infinite wiſdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wiſe mind governing the affairs of the world. South.

Supreme, all-wiſe, eternal, potentate!
Sole author, ſole diſpoſer of our fate! Prior.

ALLANTO'IS, or ALLANTO'IDES. n. ſ. [from ἀλλας, a gut, and εἶδος, ſhape.] The urinary tunick placed between the amnion and chorion, which, by the navel and urachus, or paſſage by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine that comes out of the bladder. Quincy.

To ALLA'Y. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage; it is therefore derived by ſome from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law; by others, from allier, to unite; perhaps from allocare, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this ſenſe, moſt authors preſerve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY.

2. To join any thing to another, ſo as to abate its predominant qualities. It is uſed commonly in a ſenſe contrary to its original meaning, and is, to make ſomething bad, leſs bad. To obtund; to repreſs; to abate.

Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poiſon. Shakeſpeare.

No friendly offices ſhall alter or allay that rancour, that lies in ſome hellish breaſts, which upon all occaſions, will foam out at its foul mouth in ſlander and invective. Swift.

3. To quiet; to pacify; to repreſs. The word, in this ſenſe, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer, but to be the Engliſh word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

If by your art you have
Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakeſpeare.

ALLA'Y. n. ſ. [alloy, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baſer kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear leſs. Gold is allayed with ſilver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; ſilver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowell thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin leſs.

For fools are ſtubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.

2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the ſame manner, as the admixture of baſer metals allays the qualities of the firſt maſs.

Dark colours eaſily ſuffer a ſenſible allay, by little ſcattering light. Newton's Opticks.

3. Allay being taken from baſer metals, commonly implies ſomething worſe than that with which it is mixed.

The joy has no allay of jealouſy, hope, and fear. Roſcommon.

ALLA'YER. n. ſ. [from allay.] The perſon or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony: and Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies; becauſe he eſteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceneſs. Harvey.

ALLA'YMENT, n. ſ. [from allay.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment would I give my grief. Shakeſp.

ALLEGA'TION, n. ſ. [from allege.]

1. Affirmation; declaration.

2. The thing alleged or affirmed.

Hath he not twit our ſovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly couche?
As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſwear
Falſe allegations, to o'erthrow his ſtate.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

3. An excuſe; a plea.

I omitted no means to be informed of my errours; and I expect not to be excuſed in any negligence on account of youth, want of leiſure, or any other idle allegations. Pope.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.

2. To plead as an excuſe, or produce as an argument.

Surely the preſent form of church-government is ſuch, as no law of God, or reaſon of man, hath hitherto been alleged of force ſufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmoſt of their power, withſtand the alteration thereof. Hooker.

If we forſake the ways of grace or goodneſs, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of inſtruction; we cannot ſay we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged.

Upon this interpretation all may be ſolved, that is allegeable againſt it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. ſ. [from allige.] The ſame with aliegation. Dict.

ALLE'GER. n. ſ. [from allege.] He that alleges.

The narrative, if we believe it as confidently as the famous alleger of it, Pamphilio, appears to do, would argue, that there is no other principle requiſite, than what may reſult from the luck, mixture of two bodies. Bacon.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. ſ. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of ſubjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud ſhouts and ſalutations from their mouths,
Even in the preſence of the crowned king.
Shakeſpeare.

We charge you, on allegiance to ourſelves,
To hold your ſlaughtering hands, and keep the peace. Shakeſpeare.

The houſe of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the ſeveral counties of England, profeſſing all allegiance to them, govern abſolutely; the lords concurring, or rather ſubmitting to whatever is propoſed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now uſed.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeſerver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'r to heaven for you. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they pretend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I diſcern not. Milton.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; myſtical.

When our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical and myſtical ſenſe, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers underſtood him literally and groſsly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for ſhooting is capable of two applications; one literal, in reſpect of the darts and bow, the enſigns of that god, the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the ſun. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the meſſenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham.

The places are to be underſtood allegorically; and what is thus ſpoken by a Phyſician with wiſdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddeſs of it. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALNESS. n. ſ. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To ALLE'GORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a ſenſe not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his ſuppoſition of the tree itſelf to be true. Raleigh.

As ſome would allegorize theſe ſigns, ſo others would confine them to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Burnet: Theory.

As alchymiſt ſhall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by ſal, ſulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the ſcripture itſelf, and the ſacred myſteries thereof, into the philoſopher's ſtone. Locke.

ALLEGORY. n. ſ. [ἀλληγορία.] A figurative diſcourſe, in which ſomething other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither muſt we draw out our allegory too long, leſt either we make ourſelves obſcure, or fall into affectation, which is childiſh. Ben. Jonſon.

This word nympha meant nothing elſe but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moiſture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLE'GRO. n. ſ. A word denoting one of the ſix diſtinctions of time. It expreſſes a ſprightly motion, the quickeſt of all, except Preſto. It originally means gay, as in Milton.

ALLELU'JAH. n. ſ. [This word is falſely written for Halleluiah, הַלְלוּיָהּ and יָהּ.] A word of ſpiritual exultation, uſed in hymns; it ſignifies, Praiſe God.

He will ſet his tongue to thoſe pious divine ſtrains, which may be a proper præludium to thoſe alleluiahs he hopes eternally to ſing.
Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMA'NDE. n. ſ. [Ital.] A grave kind of muſick. Dict.

To ALLE'VIATE. v. a. [allevo, Lat.]

1. To make light; to eaſe; to ſoften.

The pains taken in the ſpeculative, will much alleviate the labour in deſcribing the practic part. Harvey.

Moſt of the diſtempers are the effects of abuſed plenty and luxury, and muſt not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithſtanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate thoſe evils which we bring upon ourſelves. Bentley.

2. To extenuate, or ſoften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuſe.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. ſ. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendſhip. South.

2. That by which any pain is eaſed, or fault extenuated.

This loſs of one fifth of their income will ſit heavy on them, who ſhall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A'LLEY. n. ſ. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With faeing work, and leading in and out far.
Spenſer.

Where alleys are cloſe gravell'd, the earth puſheth forth the firſt year knotgraſs, and after ſpiregraſs. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown.
Milton.

Come, my fair love, our morning's talk we loſe;
Some labour ev'n the coldeſt hite would chooſe
Ours is not yet, the dangling bows to crop,
Whoſe too luxuriant growth our alleys ſtop. Dryd.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomſticks made,
Now ſweep thoſe alleys they were born to ſhade.
Pope.

2. A paſſage in towns narrower than a ſtreet.

A back friend, a ſhoulder clapper, one that commands the paſſages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands. Shakeſpeare.

ALLI'ANCE. n. ſ. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this ſenſe, our hiſtories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.

2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen ſhall th' alliance join
Betwixt the Trojan and th' Auſonian line. Dryd.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's ſake,
And, for alliance' ſake, declare the cauſe
My father loſt his head. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

Adraſtus ſoon, with gods averſe, ſhall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence ſtrife ſhall riſe, and mortal war ſucceed.
Pope.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorſet, your ſon, that with a fearful ſoul
Leads diſcontented ſteps in foreign ſoil,
This fair alliance quickly ſhall call home
To high promotions. Shak ſp. Richard III.

5. The perſons allied to each other.

I would not boaſt the greatneſs of my father,
But point out new alliance to Cato. Addiſon.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. ſ. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing; magnetiſm; attraction.

The ſeigneurial central alliciency is but a word, and the manner of it ſtill occult. Glanville.

To ALLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA'TION. n. ſ. [from all gate.]

1. The act of tying together; the ſtate of being ſo tied.

2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjuſt the price of compounds, formed of ſeveral ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA'TOR. n. ſ. The crocodile. This name is chiefly uſed for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturaliſts have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy ſhop a tortoiſe hung,
An alligator ſtuff'd, and other ſkins
Of ill-ſhap'd fiſhes. Shakeſpeare.

Aloft in rows large poppy-heads were ſtrung,
And here a ſcaly alligator hung.
Garth's Diſpenſary.

ALLIGATURE. n. ſ. [from allegate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLI'SION. n. ſ. [allido, allſum, Lat.] The act of ſtriking one thing againſt another.

There have not been any iſlands of note, or conſiderable extent, torn and caſt off from the continent by earthquakes, or ſevered from it by the boiſterous aſſilion of the ſea. Woodward.

ALLITERA'TION. n. ſ. [ad and litera, Lat.] Of what the critics call the alliteration, or beginning of ſeveral words in the ſame verſe with the ſame letter, there are inſtances in the oldeſt and beſt writers, as,

Behemoth biggeſt born.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

ALLOCA'TION. n. ſ. [alloco, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.

ALLO'DIAL. adj. [from allodium.] Held without without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLODIUM. n. s. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German original.] A possession held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependence. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. s. [allonge, Fr.]

1. A pass or thrust with a rapier, so called from the lengthening of the space taken up by the fencer.

2. It is likewise taken for a long rein, when the horse is trotted in the hand.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally spoken hallow, and is used to dogs, when they are incited to the chace of battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allons; perhaps from all to, look all; shewing the object.] To set on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Ah why should I encounter boist'rous rude
The noxious beast, and overcome in fight
A fallen mortal for my prey? Pope.

ALLOQUY. n. s. [allequium, Lat.] The act of speaking to another; address; conversation. Dict.

To ALLOT. v. a. [from lot]

1. To distribute by lot.

2. To grant.

Let me have
Such privilege as this fair province,
To which I come from either the east or west,
And, on the strength of that, claim the first rank
Upon this kingdom. Shakspeare's Virginia.

I shall discover more, that I may
Distribute honour which heaven allots to virtue.
Dryden.

3. To distribute, to parcel out; to give each his share.

Since fame was the only end of all their studies, a man cannot but be scrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Swift.

ALLO'TMENT. n. s. [from allot.]

1. That which is allotted to any one, the part, the share, the portion granted.

There can be no thought of security or quietness in this world, but in a resignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estrange.

Though it is our duty to submit with patience to more scanty allotments, yet this much we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God.
Regers's Sermons.

2. Part appropriated.

It is laid out into a grove for shade and state, a vineyard, and an allotment for chives and herbs.
Bacon.

ALLO'TTERY. n. s. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLOTMENT.

Allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament. Shakespeare.

To ALLOW. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare, Lat.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a position; not to contradict; not to oppose.

The principles which all mankind allow for true, are innate; those, that men of right reason admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind.
Locke.

The pow'r of musick all our hearts allow;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope.

That some of the Presbyterians declared openly against the king's murder, I allow to be true.
Swift.

2. To justify; to maintain as right.

The pow'rs above
Allow obedience. Shakespeare.

The Lord alloweth the righteous. Bible.

3. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much sincerity to the professions of most men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts.
Locke.

I shall be ready to allow the pope as little power here as you please. Swift.

4. To grant license to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the bedlam
To lead him where he would, his roguish madness
Allows itself to any thing. Shakspeare.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak, not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.
1 Thess. ii. 4

They reviewed all laws, that were to be put in force in Ireland, to be considered, corrected, and allowed into the state of England. Davies on Ireland.

5. To give a sanction to; to authorize.

There is no slander in an allowed fool. Shakesp.

6. To give to, to pay to.

Upon all the dust that o'ers his tears allows
To him that gave us peace and empire now.
Waller.

7. To appoint for; to set out to a certain use; as, he allowed his son the third part of his income.

8. To make abatement, or provision; or to settle any thing, with some concessions or cautions regarding something else.

In some of the old reformations of ancient and modern medals, we shall find they have chosen rather to represent in their recording the great actions and successes in war, allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it.
Addison.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is represented, before our Saviour, washing his feet on her knees, which will not consist with the text.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. That which is permitted or licensed; lawful; not forbidden.

In reference to this law, the rule of nature alone serves to direct that which is in the sight of God allowable. Hooker.

Lest, by this fond allowance, praising friends,
Tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence.
Sylv.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very precious blessing to magistrates; and their pursuit of it is not only allowable but laudable.
Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. s. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

Let, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation, are indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others.
South's Sermons.

ALLO'WANCE. n. s. [from allow.]

1. Admittion without contradiction.

That which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that succeed, although it plead for itself nothing. Hooker.

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; license; authority.

You sent a large commission to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,
A league between his Highness and Ferrara.
Shakespeare.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be accustomed betimes to consult and make use of their reason, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A settled rate, or appointment for any use.

The diet in plantations ought to be expended almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. 2 Kings.

5. Abatement from the strict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in heroick verse, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thoughts as the expression; and, as such, requires the same grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances for an innocent passion. Swift.

6. Established character; reputation.

His barks stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approv'd allowance. Shakesp.

ALLOY. n. s. [See ALLAY.]

1. Baser metal mixed in coinage.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Pure silver is silver without the mixture of any baser metal. Alloy is baser metal mixed with it. Locke.

Let a thin piece be coined of the same weight, when half the silver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, it will be worth but half as much, for the value of the alloy is so inconsiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men, for they taste them sincere and pure without mixture or alloy. Atterbury.

ALLUDE'SCENCY. n. s. [allubescentia, Lat.] Willingness; content. Dict.

To ALLUDE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes to an old story; or, of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom do seem to allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.

Thus it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker.

Then just proportions were taken and everything placed by weight and measure: and this I doubt not was that artificial structure here alluded to.
Burnet's Theory.

ALLU'MINOR. n. s. [allumer, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light, and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowell.

To ALLURE. v. a. [leurer, Fr. loeren, Dutch; belæpen, Sax.] To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardneſs deterreth from it; and punishments, which may more deter from evil, than any ſweetneſs thereto allureth. Hooker.

The golden ſun, in ſplendour likeſt heav'n
Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton.

ALLU'RE. n. ſ. [from the verb allure.] Something ſet up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The father to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Hayward.

ALLU'REMENT. n. ſ. [from allure.] That which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleaſure.

Againſt allurement, cuſtom, and a world
Offended; fearleſs of reproach, and ſcorn,
Or violence. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

—Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell. Paradiſe Regained.

To ſhun th' allurement is not hard
To minds refolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd;
But wond'rous difficult, when once belief,
To ſtruggle through the ſtraits, and break th' involving net. Dryden.

ALLU'RER. n. ſ. [from allure.] The perſon that allures; enticer; inveigler.

ALLU'RINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLU'RINGNESS. n. ſ. [from alluring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; invitation; temptation by propoſing pleaſure.

ALLU'SION. n. ſ. [alluſio, Lat.] That which is ſpoken with reference to ſomething ſuppoſed to be already known, and therefore not expreſſed; a hint: an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifeſt alluſions and tootſteps of the diſſolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its laſt ruin. Burnet's Theory.

This laſt alluſion gall'd the familiar more,
Becauſe indeed it rubb'd upon the ſore. Dryden.

Expreſſions now out of uſe, alluſions to cuſtoms loſt to us, and various particularities, muſt needs continue ſeveral paſſages in the dark. Locke.

ALLU'SIVE. adj. [alludo, alluſum, Lat.] Hinting at ſomething not fully expreſſed.

Where the expreſſion in one place is plain, and the ſenſe affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expreſſion, in the other, is figurative or alluſive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reaſonable, in this latter place, to reſtrain the extent of the figure and alluſion to a conſiſtency with the former. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLU'SIVELY. adv. [from alluſive.] In an alluſive manner; by implication; by inſinuation.

The Jewiſh nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compaſs of one generation, were, according to his prediction, deſtroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by thoſe eagles (Matt xxiv. 28.), by which, alluſively, are noted the Roman armies, whoſe enſign was the eagle. Hammond.

ALLU'SIVENESS. n. ſ. [from alluſive.] The quality of being alluſive.

ALLU'VION. n. ſ. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to ſomething elſe by the motion of the water.
2. The thing carried by water to ſomething elſe.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increaſe which ariſes from alluvion, which is defined an inſenſible increment, brought by the water. Cowell.

ALLU'VIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon ſomething elſe.

To ALLY'. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendſhip, or confederacy.

All theſe ſepts are allied to the inhabitants of the North, ſo as there is no hope that they will ever ſerve faithfully againſt them. Spenſer on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, paſſions, cloſer ſtill ally
The common int'reſt, or endear the tye. Pope.

To the ſun ally'd,
From him they draw the animating fire. Thomſon.

2. To make a relation between two things, by ſimilitude, or reſemblance, or any other means.

Two lines are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's ſenſe; but they are too like the tenderneſs of Ovid. Dryden.

ALLY'. n. ſ. [allie, Fr.] One united by ſome means of connexion; as marriage, friendſhip, confederacy.

He in court ſtood on his own feet; for the moſt of his allies rather leaned upon him than ſhored him. Wotton.

We could hinder the acceſſion of Holland to France, either as ſubject, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferiour and dependent ally under their protection. Temple.

ALMACANTAR. n. ſ. [An Arabick word, written variouſly by various authors; by D'Herbelot, almocantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally uſed in the plural, and means a ſeries of parallel circles drawn through the ſeveral degrees of the meridian.

ALMACA'NTAR'S STAFF. n. ſ. An inſtrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, uſed to take obſervations of the ſun, about the time of its riſing and ſetting, in order to find the amplitude, and conſequently the variation of the compaſs. Chambers.

A'LMANACK. n. ſ. [Derived, by ſome, from the Arabick al, and manab, Heb. to count, or compute; by others, from al, Arabick, and μην, a month, or μανανὸς, the courſe of the months; by others, from a Teutonick original, al and maan, the moon, an account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.] A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the ſeaſons, with the return of feaſts and faſts, is noted for the enſuing year.

It will be ſaid, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well, Spain hath not aſſailed this kingdom. Bacon.

This aſtrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inverſion of the common prognoſticators. Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman two, and ſhun her light,
Who in theſe ſtudies does herſelf delight;
By whom a greaſy almanack is borne,
With often handling, like chaft amber worn. Dryden.

I'll have a faſting almanack printed on purpoſe for her uſe. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'LMANDINE. n. ſ. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarſer and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Dict.

ALMI'GHTINESS. n. ſ. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It ſerveth to the world for a witneſs of his almightineſs, whom we outwardly honour with the cheifeſt of outward things. Hooker.

In creating and making exiſtent the world univerſal, by the abſolute act of his own word, God ſhewed his power and almightineſs. Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderneſs, the bittern and the ſtork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his proviſions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightineſs. Taylor.

ALMI'GHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham, and ſaid unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. Geneſis xvii. 1.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,
That you diveſt yourſelf, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations, 'long
To him and to his heirs. Shakeſpeare.

A'LMOND. n. ſ. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German; ſuppoſing that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond tree, either ſweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the ſweet taſte into an oily one. Locke.

A'LMOND TREE. n. ſ. [amygdalus, Lat.] It has leaves and flowers very like thoſe of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compreſſed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the ſhell is not ſo rugged. Miller.

Like to an almond tree, mounted high
On top of Green Seleno, all alone,
With bloſſoms brave bedecked daintily,
Whoſe tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown. Fairy Queen.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will anſwer to the ſylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears, are two round glands placed on the ſides of the baſis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval ſinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of leſſer ones, which diſcharge themſelves through the great ſinus of a mucous and ſlippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œſophagus, for the moiſtening and lubricating thoſe parts. When the œſophagus muſcle acts, it compreſſes the almonds, and they frequently are the occaſion of a ſore throat. Quincy.

The tonſils, or almonds of the ears, are alſo frequently ſwelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a ſpecies of it. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called alſo the Sweep, is a peculiar kind of furnace uſed in refining, to ſeparate metals from cinders and other foreign ſubſtances. Chambers.

A'LMONER,

A'LMONER, or A'LMNER. n. f. [eleemoſynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other perſon, employed in the diſtribution of charity.

I enquired for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the worthieſt man. Dryden.

AL'MONRY. n. f. [from almoner.] The place where the almoner reſides, or where the alms are diſtributed.

ALMO'ST. adv. [from all and moſt; that is, moſt part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to univerſality.

Who is there almoſt, whoſe mind, at ſome time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not ſo faſtened to ſome clog, that it could not turn itſelf to any other object. Locke.

There can be no ſuch thing or notion, as an almoſt infinite; there can be nothing next or ſecond to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becomes unequal to his freight,
And almoſt faints beneath the glowing weight. Addiſon.

ALMS. n. f. [in Saxon, elmeſ, from eleemoſyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitouſly in relief of the poor. It has no ſingular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my ſtirrup, bend like his
That hath received an alms. Shakeſpeare.

The poor beggar hath a juſt demand of an alms from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injuſtice, and oppreſſion, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

A'LMS-BASKET. n. f. [from alms and baſket.] The baſket in which proviſions are put to be given away.

There ſweepings do as well,
As the beſt order'd meal;
For who the reliſh of theſe gueſts will fit,
Needs ſet them but the alms-baſket of wit.
Ben Jonſon.

We'll ſtand up for our properties, was the beggar's ſong that lived upon the alms baſket. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

A'LMSDEED. n. f. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which ſhe did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard-favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'ſt back. Shakeſp.

A'LMS-GIVER. n. f. [from alms and giver.] He that gives alms; he that ſupports others by his charity.

He endowed many religious foundations, and yet was he a great alms-giver in ſecret, which ſhewed that his works in public were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bacon.

A'LMSHOUSE. n. f. [from alms and houſe.] A houſe devoted to the reception and ſupport of the poor; an hoſpital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almſ-aſes for the poor, and the ſorting out of the people into pariſhes, are manifeſt. Hooker.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint ſouls, paſt corporal toil,
A hundred almshouſes right well ſupplied. Shakeſp.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples and other rapine, build an hoſpital, or almshouſe, out of the ruins of the church, and the ſpoils of widows and orphans. L'Eſtrange.

Behold yon almshouſe, neat, but void of ſtate,
Where age and want ſit ſmiling at the gate. Pope.

A'LMSMAN. n. f. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is ſupported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a ſet of beads;
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage;
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown. Shakeſp.

A'LMUG-TREE. n. f. A tree mentioned in ſcripture. Of its wood were made muſical inſtruments, and it was uſed alſo in rails, or in a ſtaircaſe. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is tranſlated wrought wood, and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina. But coral could never anſwer the purpoſes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum, or citron-tree, much eſteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or ſimply gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be underſtood oily and gummy ſorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is, perhaps, the ſame with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moſes. Calmet.

And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNEGER. n. f. [from alnage.] A meaſurer by the ell; a ſworn officer, whoſe buſineſs formerly was to inſpect the aſſize of woollen cloth, and to fix the ſeals appointed upon it for that purpoſe; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the ſearcher, meaſurer, and alneger. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. f. [from aulnage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-meaſure, or rather the meaſuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. f. [from all and night.]

A ſervice which they call alnight, is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midſt; whereby it cometh to paſs, that the wick fetcheth the nouriſhment farther off. Bacon.

A'LOES. n. f. [אהלים, as it is ſuppoſed.] A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood uſed, in the Eaſt, for perfumes, of which the beſt ſort is of higher price than gold, and was the moſt valuable preſent given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tambac, and is the heart, or innermoſt part, of the aloe tree; the next part to which is called Calembac, which is ſometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferiour value to the Tambac, is much eſteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portugueſe, Pao d'aquila, or eagle-wood; but ſome account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another ſpecies. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Survary.
2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.
3. Aloes is a medicinal juice, extracted, not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and expoſing the juice that drops from them to the ſun. It is diſtinguiſhed into Socotorine and Caballine, or horſe aloes: the firſt is ſo called from Socotora; the ſecond, becauſe, being coarſer, it ought to be confined to the uſe of farriers. It is a warm and ſtrong cathartick.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Conſiſting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by aloetical, ſcammoniate, or acrimonious medicines. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ALOE'TICK. n. f. [from aloes.] Any medicine is ſo called, which chiefly conſiſts of aloes. Quincy.

ALO'FT. adv. [loffter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Icelandiſh; ſo that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word uſed chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in ſtories oft,
That love has wings, and ſoars aloft. Suckling.

Upright he ſtood, and bore aloft his ſhield
Conſpicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field.
Dryden.

ALO'FT. prep. Above.

The great luminary
Aloft the vulgar conſtellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep diſtance due,
Diſpenſes light from far. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A'LOGY. n. f. [ἀλογία.] Unreaſonableneſs; abſurdity. Dict.

ALO'NE. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een, or one, that is, ſingle.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourſelves let us decide it then. Shakeſp.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden.

God, by whoſe alone power and converſation we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; ſolitary.

Eagles we ſee fly alone, and they are but ſheep which always herd together. Sidney.

Alone, for other creature in this place
Living, or lifeleſs, to be found was none. Milton.

I never durſt in darkneſs be alone. Dryden.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is ſeldom uſed but with the word let, if even then it be an adverb. It implies ſometimes an ironical prohibition, forbidding to help a man who is able to manage the affair himſelf.

Let us alone to guard Corioli,
If they ſet down before 's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakeſpeare.

Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was.
Ben Jonſon.

2. To forbear; to leave undone.

His client ſtole it, but he had better have let it alone; for he loſt his cauſe by his jeſt. Addiſon.

ALO'NG. adv. [au longue, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty ſtone; ſome laid along,
And bound with burning wires, on ſpokes of wheels are hung. Dryden.

2. Through any ſpace meaſured lengthwiſe.

A firebrand carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Where Uſens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina ſtands. Dryden.

3. Throughout; in the whole: with all prefixed.

Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotſon.

They were all along a croſs, untoward ſort of people. South.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.

[illegible] will forthwith dispatch,
[illegible] shall along with you.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

[illegible] and Evil go with thee along,
[illegible] things to the place of evil, Hell. Milton.

[illegible] seat is subject to an ex[illegible]ess, and [illegible] when something is mingled with it which should not have, or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Spect.

Sometimes with is understood.

Command thy slaves: my treason should disdain
A tyrant's curb, and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along, and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize.
Dryden.

2. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

ALONGST. adv. A corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep strait watch and ward in all their ports alongst the haven's mouth.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

ALOOF. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a distance; with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bade the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside,
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And eke be safe from dinges far described.
Fairy Queen.

As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

The noise approaches, though our palace stood
Aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood.
Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay. Shakesp.

Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last, when they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Christian ground. Bacon.

Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay. The water carried them away, the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other.
L'Estrange's Fables.

The strong may fight aloof, Ancæus try'd
His force too near, and by presuming dy'd.
Dryden's Fables.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man hold the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,
But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join, for, if she stand aloof, those will be still suspicious: it being a received opinion, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power. Suckling.

5. It is applied to things not properly being [illegible] each other.

Love's not love,
[illegible] with regards that stand
[illegible] point. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

ALOUD. adv. [a and loud.] Loudly; with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and admonish proud,
That of the great neglecting to be just,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust.
Then heav'n's high monarch thund'red thrice aloud,
And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden.

ALOW. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now aloft and now aloft they fly,
As borne through air, and seem to touch the sky.
Dryden.

ALPHA. n. s. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am Alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelations.

ALPHABET. n. s. [from ἄλφα, alpha, and βῆτα, beta, the two first letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not sigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will read an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Shakespeare.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth, and the great variety of syllables compounded of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity, and the endless number of words capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables, or of one, are wonderful.
Holder.

Taught by their nurses, little children get
The saying, sooner than their alphabet.
Lord Lansdown.

To ALPHABET. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABETICAL. } adj. [from alphabet;
ALPHABETICK. } alphabetique, Fr.] In the order of the alphabet, according to the series of letters.

I have digested it in an alphabetical order, all the counties, corporations, and boroughs in Great Britain, with their respective tempers. Swift.

ALPHABETICALLY. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner, according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts to contrive a grammar, more than I can now comprise in six sheets, and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the dear person is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

ALREADY. adv. [from all and ready.] At this present time, or at some time past, opposed to futurity; as, Will he come soon? He is here already. Will it be done? It has been done already.

Touching our uniformity, that which hath been already answered, may serve for answer. Hooker.

You warn'd me still of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you?
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

See, the guards, from yon Western hill
Already move, no longer stay afar;
High in the air they wave the flaming sword,
Your signal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Methods for the advancement of piety, are in the power of a prince, limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.

Methinks, already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALS. adv. [als, Dutch] Also; likewise. a word now out of use.

Sad remembrance now the prince amoves
With fresh desire his voyage to pursue,
Als Unlearn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen.

ALSO. adv. [from all and so.]

1. In the same manner; likewise.

Whether now, we doubt, preponderated the causes of the great deluge, as according to Moses, so also according to necessity; for our world affords no other treasures of water. Burnet's Theory.

2. Also is sometimes nearly the same with and; and only conjoins the members of the sentences.

God do so to thee, and more also.
1 Samuel, xiv. 44.

ALTAR. n. s. [altare, Lat. It is observed by Junius, that the word altar is received, with christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the Fathers, as appropriated to the Christian worship, in opposition to the aræ of gentilism.]

1. The place where offerings to heaven are laid.

The goddess of the nuptial bed,
Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Retolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd,
Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryden.

2. The table in Christian churches where the communion is administered.

Her grace rose, and, with modest paces,
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd, and saint-like
Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakespeare.

ALTARAGE. n. s. [altaragium, Lat.] An emolument arising to the priest from oblations, through the means of the altar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTAR-CLOTH. n. s. [from altar and cloth.] The cloth thrown over the altar in churches.

I should set down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar cloths, which our kings gave their abbey.
Peacham on Drawing.

To ALTER. v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwise than it is. To alter, seems more properly to imply a change made only in some part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot, or interpolate it; to change it, may be, to substitute another in its place. With from and to; as, her face is altered from pale to red.

Do you not see
How much her grief has alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold? Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Acts appropriated to the worship of God, by his own appointment, must continue so, till himself hath otherwise declared: for who dares alter what God hath appointed? Stillingfleet.

2. To take off from a persuasion, practice, or sect.

For the way of writing plays in verse, I find it troublesome and slow, but I am no way altered from my opinion of it, at least with any reasons which have opposed it. Dryden.

To ALTER. v. n. To become otherwise than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

ALTERABLE. adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That which may be altered or changed by something else; distinct from changeable, or that which changes, or may change itself.

That alterable respects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a considerate discerner.
Glanville.

Our condition in this world is miserable and uncertain, alterable by a thousand accidents, which we can neither foresee nor prevent. Rogers.

I wish they had been more clear in their directions upon that mighty point, Whether the settlement of the succession in the House of Hanover be alterable, or no? Swift.

A'LTERABLENESS. n. f. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external causes.

A'LTERABLY. adv. [from alterable.] In such a manner as may be altered.

A'LTERAGE. n. f. [from alo.] The breeding, nourishing, or fostering of a child.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers: the rich sell, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children, and the reason is, because, in the opinion of the people, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood.

Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'LTERANT. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation, for else all bodies would be alike one to another. Bacon.

ALTERA'TION. n. f. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worse to better, hath in it inconveniencies, and those weighty. Hooker.

2. The change made.

Why may we not presume, that God doth even call for such change or alteration, as the very condition of things themselves doth make need-ful? Hooker.

She, with difficulty and labour hard,
Moved on
But hardly once past, soon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin, and Death, amain
Following his track (such was the will of heaven)
Paved after him a broad and beaten way. Milton

No other alteration will satisfy, nor this much very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the senate the sons of those who had been slaves, by which, and succeeding alterations, that council degenerated into a most corrupt body. Swift

A'LTERATIVE. adj. [from alter]

Medicines called alterative, are such as have no immediate sensible operation, but gradually gain upon the constitution, by changing the humours from a state of distemperature to health. They are opposed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by such alterative medicines as purify the blood. Government of the Tongue.

ALTERCA'TION. n. f. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controversy; wrangle.

By this hot pursuit of lower controversies amongst men professing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themselves, time will cause altercation to grow. Hooker

Their whole life was little else than a perpetual wrangling and altercation; and that, many times, rather for victory and ostentation of wit, than a sober and serious search of truth.

Hakewill on Providence.

ALTE'RN. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in succession each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their use
To man; the greater to have rule by day,
The less by night, altern. Milton

ALTE'RNACY. n. f. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTERNATE. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendship consists properly in mutual offices, and a generous strife in alternate acts of kindness. South.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libian Joye
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

ALTE'RNATE ANGLES [in geometry] are the internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the opposite sides of the cutting line; the one below the first parallel, and the other above the second.

ALTE'RNATE. n. f. [from alternate, adj.] That which happens alternately; vicissitude.

And rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,
Grateful alternates of substantial peace,
They bless the long nocturnal influence shed
On the crown'd goblet, and the genial bed. Prior.

To ALTE'RNATE. v. a. [alterno, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Those who, in their course,
Melodious hymns about the sov'reign throne
Alternate all night long. Milton

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The most high God, in all things appertaining unto this life, for sundry wise ends, alternates the disposition of good and evil. Grew

ALTE'RNATELY. adv. [from alternate] In reciprocal succession, so that each shall be succeeded by that which it succeeds, as light follows darkness, and darkness follows light.

The princess Melesinda, bath'd in tears,
And toss'd alternately with hopes and fears,
Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord.
Dryden

Unhappy man! whom sorrow thus and rage
To different ills alternately engage. Prior.

The rays of light are, by some cause or other, alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton

ALTE'RNATENESS. n. f. [from alternate.] The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal succession Dict

ALTERNA'TION. n. f. [from alternate.] The reciprocal succession of things.

The one would be oppressed with contrary heat, the other with insufferable cold; and so the defect of alternation would utterly impugn the generation of all things. Brown.

ALTE'RNATIVE. n. f. [alternatif, Fr.] The choice given of two things; so that if one be rejected, the other must be taken.

A strange alternative———
Must ladies have a doctor, or a dance? Young

ALTE'RNATIVELY. adv. [from alternative] In alternate manner; by turns; reciprocally.

An appeal alternatively made may be tolerated by the civil law as valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTE'RNATIVENESS. n. f. [from alternative.] The quality or state of being alternative; reciprocation. Dict.

ALTE'RNITY. n. f. [from altern.] Reciprocal succession; vicissitude; turn; mutual change of one thing for another; reciprocation.

They imagine, that an animal of the vastest dimensions, and largest duration, should live in a continual motion, without the alternity and vicissitude of rest, whereby all other animals subsist. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALTHO'UGH. conj. [from all and though. See THOUGH.] Notwithstanding; however it may be granted; however it may be that.

We all know, that many things are believed, although they be intricate, obscure, and dark; although they exceed the reach and capacity of human wit; yea, although in this world they be no way possible to be understood. Hooker.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakespeare.

The stress must be laid upon a majority, without which the laws would be of little weight, although they be good additional securities. Swift.

A'LTIGRADE. adj. [from altus and gradior, Lat.] Rising on high. Dict.

ALTI'LOQUENCE. n. f. [altus and loquor, Lat.] High speech; pompous language.

A'LTITUDE. n. f. [altitudo, Lat.]

1. Height of place; space measured upward.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude,
Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakespeare.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.

She shines above, we know, but in what place,
How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
By our weak optics is but vainly guess'd;
Distance and altitude conceal the rest. Dryden.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon.

Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much considerable, whether we consider its ascent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He that is not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he observe them and their influences in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depressions? Rymer.

3. Situation with regard to lower things.

Those members which are pairs, stand by one another in equal altitude, and answer on each side one to another. Ray.

5. Height of excellence; superiority.

Your altitude offends the eyes,
Of those who want the power to rise. Swift.

5. Height of degree; highest point.

He did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakespeare.

ALTI'VOLANT. adj. [altivolens, Lat. from altus and volo.] High flying. Dict.

A'LTOGETHER. adv. [from all and together.]

1. Completely; without restriction; without exception.

It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till the people be altogether subdued. Spenser's State of Ireland.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion, it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.

I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

3. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.

Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his seat. Shakspeare.

ALUDEL. n. s. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed, and at the top is a head, to retain the fumes that rise up. Quincy

ALUM. n. s. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency. The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Melo, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and porous, and streaked with filaments resembling silver. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced, and the English ro be alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire.

Saccharine alum is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools, it grows hard as a stone.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire.

Plumose or plume alum is a sort of saline mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green, it rises in threads or fibres, resembling those of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Chambers

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle

ALUM STONE. n. s. A stone or calx used in surgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corrosive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wiseman

ALU'MINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Nor do we reasonably conclude, because, by a cold and aluminous moisture, it is able awhile to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolic or aluminous nature. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'LWAYS. adv. [It is sometimes written alway, compounded of all and way, callepega, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time: opposed to sometime, or to never.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always so continue. Hooker

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation: opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when some great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which, in some foreign countries, is called doctor of philosophy.

Am. The first person of the verb to be. [See TO BE.]

And God said unto Moses, I am that I am and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my soul: I call thee by that name,
Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing that I am, I know thou art;
Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABI'LITY. n. s. [from amabilis, Lat.] Loveliness; the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that; and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. s. A sort of pear [See PEAR] so called, says Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT. n. s. A sort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To signify that rebels there are up. Shakspeare.

What! when we fled amain, pursued, and struck
With heaven's ten-fold terrifying thunder, and brought
The deep to shelter us? Milton

The hills, to their supply,
Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up amain Milton

From hence the boar was roused, and sprung amain,
Like lightning sudden, on the warrior train,
Beats down the trees before him, shakes the ground,
The forest echoes to the crackling sound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around Dryden

AMA'LGAM } n. s. [μαλα and γαμεω] AMA'LGAMA } The mixture of metals procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle

To AMA'LGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.] To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders

AMALGAMA'TION. n. s. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable. Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible, stir these well that they may incorporate, then cast the mass into cold water, and wash it Bacon

AMANDA'TION. n. s. [from emando, Lat.] The act of sending on a message, or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. s. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

2. In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth? a flower which once
In paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
Rolls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream:
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams. Milton's Paradise Lost.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flowers,
By those happy souls that dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel,
Or amaranthine bowers. Pope.

AMA'RITUDE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is apprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bestes. Harvey on Consumptions.

AMA'RUIENCE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Dict.

AMA'SMENT. n. s. [from amass] A heap; an accumulation, a collection

What is now, but an amassment of many confutations, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impostures. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together in one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice Atterbury's Sermons.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large stock, as part of it, millions of ages, or miles, which nothing but our doubting and multiplying several times. All that we can amass to this in our thoughts, is finite, and the accumulation of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination.

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vul. Errours.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world. Pope.

AMA'SS. n. s. [amas, Fr.] An assemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amass of all the excellent ornaments, making a new kind by itself. Wotton.

To AMA'TE. v. a. [from a and mate.] See MATE]

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sate,
Coverted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them in most fit wise amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

Amato'rculist. n. f. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little inſignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'matory. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; cauſing love.

It is the ſame thing whether one raviſh Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions not only allure her, but neceſſitate her to ſatisfy his luſt, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably, to follow him ſpontaneouſly. Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

Amaurosis. n. f. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimneſs of ſight, not from any viſible defect in the eye, but from ſome diſtemperature of the inner parts, occaſioning the repreſentations of flies and duſt floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compreſſed by the blood-veſſels being too much diſtended; ſo that, in many of its parts, all ſenſe is loſt, and therefore no images can be painted upon them; whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling ſucceſſively upon them, are obſcure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the ſtagnations in the extremities of thoſe arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To Ama'ze. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuſe with terrour.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings ſhall be horribly afraid for thee, when I ſhall brandiſh my ſword before them, and they ſhall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezekiel.

2. To put into confuſion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

Thit cannot chooſe but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakſpeare.

Ama'ze. n. ſ. [from the verb amaze.] Aſtoniſhment; confuſion, either of fear or wonder.

Lucifer, whoſe name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praiſe,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.
Meantime the Trojan eyes his wat'ry way,
Viſ'd o'er his voyage, through the curling ſea;
Then turning back his eyes, with due amaze,
Sees on the Punick ſhore the mounting blaze. Dryden.

Ama'zedly. adv. [from amazed.] Confuſedly; with amazement; with confuſion.

I ſpeak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my meſſage. Shakeſpeare.

Come, ſiſters, cheer we up his ſprights. Shakeſp.

Ama'zedness. n. ſ. [from amazed.] The ſtate of being amazed; aſtoniſhment; wonder; confuſion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old ſhepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedneſs, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shakſp.

Ama'zement. n. ſ. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confuſed apprehenſion as does not leave reaſon its full force; extreme fear; horrour.

He anſwer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his firſt amazement, ſtaring wide,
With ſtony eyes, and heartleſs hollow hue,
Aſtoniſh'd ſtood, as one that had eſpy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother ſits;
O ſtep between her and her fighting ſoul:
Conceit in weakeſt bodies ſtrongeſt works. Shakeſpeare.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impreſſion left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Diſtracted and ſurpris'd with deep diſmay
At theſe ſad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, ſome ages paſt, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we ſhould read your ſtory;
But living virtue, all atchievements paſt,
Meets envy ſtill to grapple with at laſt. Waller.

4. Aſtoniſhment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which ſat for alms at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

Ama'zing. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; aſtoniſhing.

It is an amazing thing to ſee the preſent deſolation of Italy, when one conſiders what incredible multitudes it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperours. Addiſon.

Ama'zingly. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite aſtoniſhment; wonderfully.

If we write to the world of ſpirits, our knowledge of them muſt be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the leaſt grain of ſand but has too many difficulties belonging to it for the wiſeſt philoſopher to anſwer. Watts's Logick.

Amazon. n. ſ. [a and μάζα.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucaſus; they are ſo called from their cutting off their breaſts, to uſe their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

And fightſt with the ſword. Shakeſpear.

Ambages. n. ſ. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of ſpeech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expreſſion.

They gave thoſe complex ideas names, that they might the more eaſily record and diſcourſe of things they were daily converſant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the thing they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the eaſier and quicker underſtood. Locke.

Ambe'gious. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious. Dict.

Ambassa'de. n. ſ. [ambaſſade, Fr.] Embaſſy; character or buſineſs of an ambaſſador: a word not now in uſe.

When you diſgraced me in my ambaſſade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakeſp.

Amba'ssadour. n. ſ. [ambaſſadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is ſuppoſed to come from the French or Spaniſh language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not eaſy to ſettle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew עבר, to tell, and מבשר, a meſſinger; others from ambactus, which, in the old Gauliſh, ſignified a ſervant; whence ambaſcia, in low Latin, is found to ſignify ſervice, and ambaſciator, a ſervant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonick, ſignifying a government, and Junius mentions a poſſibility of its deſcent from ανάβασις; and others from am for ad, and baſſus, low, as ſuppoſing the act of ſending an ambaſſadour, to be in ſome ſort an act of ſubmiſſion. All theſe derivations lead to write ambaſſadour, not embaſſadour.] A perſon ſent in a public manner from one ſovereign power to another, and ſuppoſed to repreſent the power from which he is ſent. The perſon of an ambaſſadour is inviolable.

Ambaſſadour is, in popular language, the general name of a meſſenger from a ſovereign power, and ſometimes, ludicrouſly, from common perſons. In the juridical and formal language, it ſignifies particularly a miniſter of the higheſt rank reſiding in another country, and is diſtinguiſhed from an envoy, who is of leſs dignity.

Give firſt admittance to th' ambaſſadours. Shakeſpeare.

Rais'd by theſe hopes, I ſent no news before,
Nor aſk'd your leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come without a pledge, my own ambaſſadour. Dryden.

Oft have their black ambaſſadours appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama. Addiſon.

Amba'ssadress. n. ſ. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambaſſadour.

2. In ludicrous language, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

Well, my ambaſſadreſs———
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe.

A'mbassage. n. ſ. [from ambaſſadour.] An embaſſy; the buſineſs of an ambaſſadour.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory anſwers; ſo as the formal part of their ambaſſage might well warrant their further ſtay. Bacon.

A'mber. n. ſ. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed ambarum.]

A yellow tranſparent ſubſtance of a gummous or bituminous conſiſtence, but a reſinous taſte, and a ſmell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick ſea, along the coaſt of Pruſſia. Some naturaliſts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and ſome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny deſcribes it as a reſinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and diſcharged thence into the ſea. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of ſuccinum, from ſuccus, juice. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaſt; others, the ſcum of the lake Cephiſis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in ſome fountains, where it is found ſwimming like pitch. Others ſuppoſe it a bitumen trickling into the ſea from ſubterraneous ſources; but this opinion is alſo diſcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea, as that gathered on the coaſt. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatic plants, elaborated by heat into a cryſtalline form. Within ſome pieces of amber have been found leaves and inſects included; which ſeems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ſtate, or that, having been expoſed to the ſun, it was ſoftened, and rendered ſuſceptible of the leaves and inſects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it, and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiouſly in the dark. Some diſtinguiſh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are ſuppoſed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. Trevoux. Chambers.

Liquid amber is a kind of native balſam or reſin, like turpentine; clear, reddiſh, or yellowiſh; of a pleaſant pleasant smell, almost like ambergris. It flows from an incision made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives ojosol. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glass, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreathes around his temples spread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addison.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Consisting of amber.

With scarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry. Shakespeare.

A'MBER-DRINK. n. s. Drink of the colour of amber, or resembling amber in colour and transparency.

All your clear amber-drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS. n. s. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a greyish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the sun, and washed off the shore by the waves, is swallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fish, because sometimes found in the intestines of such animals. But we have no instance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it should rather be found where these animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which distils from trees, and drops into the sea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it springs out of the sea, as naphtha does out of some fountains. Others assert it to be a vegetable production, issuing out of the root of a tree, whose roots always shoot towards the sea, and discharge themselves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the sea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nests; several persons having seen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb, and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Neumann absolutely denies it to be an animal substance, as not yielding, in the analysis, any one animal principle. He concludes it to be a bitumen issuing out of the earth into the sea; at first of a viscous consistence, but hardening, by its mixture with some liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermuda, wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy island, where huge lemons grow,
Where shining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich shore, of ambergris is found? Waller.

AMBER SEED, or musk seed, resembles millet, is of a bitterish taste, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. s. [frutex Africanus ambram spirans.] A shrub, whose beauty is in its small evergreen leaves, which grow as close as heath, and, being braised between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDE'XTER. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the use of both his hands.

Radiginus, undertaking to give a reason of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either side, in party disputes. This sense is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTE'RITY. n. s. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to use both hands.
2. Double dealing.

AMBIDE'XTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter. Lat.]

1. Having, with equal facility, the use of either hand.

Others, not considering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally submit unto the efficacy of the liver. Brown.

2. Double dealing; practising on both sides.

Æsop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all falle, shuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Estrange.

AMBIDE'XTROUSNESS. n. s. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; investing.

This which yields or fills
All space, the ambient air wide interfus'd. Milton.

The thickness of a plate requisite to produce any colour, depends only on the density of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Prior to Lord Gower.

Illustrious virtues, who by turns have rule
With happy laws her empire to sustain,
And with full pow'r assert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious velocity. Bentley.

AMBIGU. n. s. [French.] An entertainment, consisting not of regular courses, but of a medley of dishes set on together.

When straiten'd in your time, and servants few,
You'd richly then compose an ambigu;
Where first and second course, and your desert,
All in one single table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGU'ITY. n. s. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulness of meaning; uncertainty of signification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

We can clear these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent. Shakespeare.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I shall not trouble you, by straining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBI'GUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what have been thy answers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful sense deluding? Milton.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left so, because the persons who framed them were not all of one mind. Clarendon.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,
In these mysterious words his mind expresst;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguous spoke. Pope.

AMBI'GUOUSLY. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBI'GUOUSNESS. n. s. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

AMBI'LOGY. n. s. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUOUS. adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUY. n. s. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The use of doubtful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. Dict.

A'MBIT. n. s. [ambitus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The tusk of a wild boar would about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little wreathen. In measuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its base is inch over. Grew's Museum.

AMBI'TION. n. s. [ambitio, Lat. the desire of something higher than is possessed at present.]

1. The desire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having seen a mind as Antiphilus, that so great goodness could [illegible] have bound, rate [illegible] and so high advancement not have [illegible] Sidney.

2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would have, and so would reason;
The sense would not be only, but be wise:
But wit's ambition long'th to the best,
For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Davies.

Urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition;
Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and cold, relent again to what it was. Shakesp.

3. It is used with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myself to your Lordship's patronage. Addison.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to her Letters.

AMBI'TIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition, if a noun; to, if expressed by a verb.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo. Donne.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crowds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryden.

You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Eager

2. Eager to grow bigger; aſpiring.

I have ſeen
Th' ambitious ocean ſwell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds.
Shakeſpeare.

AMBI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerneſs of advancement or preference.

With ſuch glad hearts did our deſpairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiouſly would claim the ken,
That with firſt eyes did diſtant ſafety meet.
Dryden.

Here Fleecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiouſly deſign'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBI'TIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

A'MBITUDE. n. ſ. [ambio, Lat.] Compaſs; circuit; circumference. Dict.

To A'MBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. See AMBLE.

It is good, on ſome occaſions, to enjoy as much of the preſent, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourſelves of the virtuoſo's ſaddle, which will be ſure to amble, when the world is upon the hardeſt trot. Dryden.

2. To move eaſily, without hard ſhocks, or ſhaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout, for he lives merrily, becauſe he feels no pain; knowing no burthen of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal.
Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous ſenſe, to move with ſubmiſſion, and by direction; as a horſe that ambles uſes a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, ſmoothing, whimpering, thief,
Shall make him amble on a gallop's meſſage,
And take the diſtaff with a hand as proud,
As queen'd did Hercules. Reeve's Take Share

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am ruddy ſtamp'd, and want love's majeſty,
To ſtrut before a wanton ambling nymph.
Shakeſpeare.

A'MBLE. n. ſ. [from To amble.] A pace or movement in which the horſe removes both his legs on one ſide; as, on the far ſide, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the ſame ſide at one time, whilſt the legs on the near ſide ſtand ſtill; and, when the far legs are upon the ground, the near ſide removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far ſide ſtand ſtill. An amble is the firſt pace of young colts, but when they have ſtrength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-maſters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horſe may be put from a trot to a gallop without ſtopping; but he cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a ſtop, which interrupts the juſtneſs of the manage.
Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER. n. ſ. [from To amble.] A horſe that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBRO'SIA. n. ſ. [ἀμβροσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleaſing to the ſmell or taſte is called ambroſia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male ſtaminous flowers, produced on ſeparate parts of the ſame plant from the fruit, having no viſible petals; the fruit which ſucceeds the feminle flowers, is ſhaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong ſeed in each.

The ſpecies are, 1. The marine or ſea ambroſia. 2. Taller unfavoury ſea ambroſia. 3. The talleſt Canada ambroſia. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL. adj. [from ambroſia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambroſia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God ſpake, ambroſial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the bleſſed ſpirits elect
Senſe of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.

The gifts of heaven my following ſong purſues,
Aerial honey and ambroſial dews. Dryden.

To fartheſt ſhores th' ambroſial ſpirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the ſkies.
Pope.

A'MBRY. n. ſ. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are diſtributed.

2. The place where plate, and utenſils for houſekeeping, are kept; alſo a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word ſtill uſed in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n. ſ. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; ſo called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life.
Shakſpeare's All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer by conſidering his own inſtance of caſting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Suppoſing the poſture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, ſuppoſing the figure of the table, and of the dice themſelves, ſuppoſing the meaſure of force applied, and ſuppoſing all other things which did concur to the production of this caſt, to be the very ſame they were, there is no doubt but in this caſe the caſt is neceſſary.
Bramhall againſt Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION, n. ſ. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and inviſible motion of the muſcles, in ſtation, proceed more offenſive laſſitudes than from ambulation.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are ſuch as require ſome baſis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: ſuch were thoſe ſelf-moving ſtatues, which, unleſs violently detained, would of themſelves run away. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

2. That which happens during a paſſage or walk.

He was fain to conſole either the princeſs, of whom his majeſty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Watton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exerciſe of its juriſdiction.

A'MBURY. n. ſ. A bloody wart on any part of a horſe's body.

AMBUSCA'DE. n. ſ. [embuſcade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private ſtation in which men lie to ſurpriſe others; ambuſh.

Then waving high her torch, the ſignal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade.
Dryden.

When I behold a faſhionable table ſet out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable diſtempers, lie in embuſcade among the diſhes. Addiſon.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. ſ. [embuſcada, Span.] A private poſt, in order to ſurpriſe an enemy.

Sometimes ſhe driveth o'er a ſoldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuſcadoes, Spaniſh blades,
Of healths five fathom deep.
Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH. n. ſ. [ambuſche, Fr. from bois, a wood; whence embuſcher, to hide in woods, ambuſhes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick foreſts.]

1. The poſt where ſoldiers or aſſaſſins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

The reſidue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambuſh, whence iſſued more. Then the earl maintained the fight. But the enemy, intending to draw the Engliſh further into their ambuſh, turned away at an eaſy pace. Hayward.

Charge, charge, their ground the ſaint Taxallans yield,
Bold in cloſe ambuſh, baſe in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

2. The act of ſurpriſing another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a ſecret poſt.

Nor ſhall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whoſe high walls fear no aſſault or ſiege,
Or ambuſh from the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. The ſtate of being poſted privately, in order to ſurpriſe; the ſtate of lying in wait.

4. Perhaps the perſons placed in private ſtations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaſter,
Once did I lay an ambuſh for your life.
Shakeſp. Richard II.

A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambuſh.] Placed in ambuſh; lying in wait.

Thick as the ſhades, there iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Taxallan enemies I gueſs.
Dryden's Indian Emperor.

A'MBUSHMENT. n. ſ. [from ambuſh; which ſee.] Ambuſh; ſurpriſe: a word now not uſed.

Like as a wily fox, that having eſpied
Where on a ſunny bank the lambs do play,
Full cloſely creeping by the hinder ſide,
Lies in ambuſhment of his hoped prey. Spenſer.

AMBU'ST. adj. [ambuſtus, Lat.] Burnt; ſcalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. ſ. [ambuſtio, Lat.] A burn; a ſcald.

A'MEL. n. ſ. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glaſs melted with calcined tin, compoſe an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the baſis of all thoſe fine concretes that goldſmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N. adv. [a word of which the original has given riſe to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, ſignifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word ſeems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, ſignifies firmneſs, certainty, fidelity.] A term uſed in devotions, by which at the end of a prayer, we mean, ſo be it; at the end of a creed, ſo it is.

One cried, God bleſs us! and, Amen! the other;
As they had ſeen me with theſe hangman's hands.
Liſtening their fear, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſs us. Shakeſp. Macb.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, from everlaſting and to everlaſting, Amen and amen.
Pſalm xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [ameſnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, ſignifies, to oblige one to appear to anſwer a charge exhibited againſt him.] Reſponſible; ſubject ſo as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, becauſe the inferiour ſort were looſe and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the beſt and eldeſt perſons of every ſept, ſhould bring in all the idle perſons of their ſurname, to be juſtified by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENAGE. } n. ſ. [They ſeem to come
A'MENANCE. } from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien: words diſuſed.

For he is fit to uſe in all aſſays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or elſe for wiſe and civil governance. Spenſer.

Well kend him ſo far ſpace,
Th' enchanter, by his arms and amenance,
When under him he ſaw his Lybian ſteed to prance. Fairy Queen.

To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to ſomething better.
2. To reform the life, or leave wickedneſs. In theſe two caſes we uſually write mend. See MEND.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cauſe you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To reſtore paſſages in writers, which the copiers are ſuppoſed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve ſuppoſes or not denies that the thing is well already, but to amend implies ſomething wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impaire, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch
Such ſanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AMENDE. n. ſ. [French.] This word, in French, ſignifies a fine, by which recompence is ſuppoſed to be made for the fault committed. We uſe, in a cognate ſignification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT. n. ſ. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was preſented on the ſtage, ſome things in it have paſſed your approbation and amendment. Dryden.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature obſerves the ſame tenour, becauſe her works are ſo perfect, that there is no place for amendment; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the underſtanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the teſtimony which Moſes and the prophets have given, concerning the miſeries that follow ſinners after death, were not likely to be perſuaded by other means, although God from the dead ſhould have raiſed them up preachers. Hooker.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguiſh, are ſent as ſcourges for amendment.
2 Eſdras, xvi. 19.

Though a ſerious purpoſe of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no ſure judgment whether this purpoſe be ſerious, or theſe acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's players hearing your amendment, Are come to play a pleaſant comedy. Shakeſp.

AME'NDMENT. n. ſ. [emendatio, Lat.] It ſignifies, in law, the correction of an errour committed in a proceſs, and eſpied before or after judgment; and ſometimes after the party's ſeeking advantage by the errour. Blount.

AME'NDER. n. ſ. [from amend.] The perſon that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. ſ. [amends, Fr. from which it ſeems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompence; compenſation; atonement.

If I have too auſterely puniſh'd you,
Your compenſation makes amends. Shakeſpeare.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to thoſe that had ſuffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Raleigh's Eſſays.

There I, a priſ'ner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught, but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n freſh blowing, pure and ſweet,
With day-ſpring born; here leave me to reſpire. Milton.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I may make the world ſome part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden.

If our ſouls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compenſation for the frailities of life, and ſufferings of this ſtate. Tillotſon.

It is a ſtrong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous perſons are very often unfortunate, and vicious perſons proſperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wiſe and good in all his works; unleſs we may ſuppoſe that ſuch a promiſcuous diſtribution, which was neceſſary for carrying on the deſign of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

AME'NITY. n. ſ. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleaſantneſs; agreeableneſs of ſituation.

If the ſituation of Babylon was ſuch at firſt as in the days of Herodotus, it was a ſeat of amenity and pleaſure. Brown.

AMENTA'CEOUS. adj. [amentatus, Lat.] Hanging as by a thread.

The pine tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins. Miller.

To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. ἀφεῖναι μὲν ἀμέρσαι, ſeems to give the original.]

1. To puniſh with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers, and is uſed by Spenſer of puniſhments in general.

Where every one that miſſeth then her make,
Shall be by him amerc'd with penance due. Spenſer.

But I'll amerce you with ſo ſtrong a fine,
That you ſhall all repent the loſs of mine. Shakeſpeare.

All the ſuitors were conſiderably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for thoſe miſchiefs. Hale.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They ſhall amerce him in an hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and give them unto the father of the damſel, becauſe he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Iſrael. Deut. xxii. 19.

3. Sometimes it is uſed, in imitation of the Greek conſtruction, with the particle of.

Millions of ſpirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal ſplendours flung
For his revolt. Milton.

AME'RCER. n. ſ. [from amerce.] He that ſets a fine upon any miſdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary puniſhment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. ſ. [from amerce.]
AME'RCIAMENT. } The pecuniary puniſhment of an offender, who ſtands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that ſhall be impoſed upon them, ſhall come unto themſelves. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. ſ. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early ſoftened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And dext'rouſly to throw the lucky ſice:
To ſhun ames ace, that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey
Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

A'MICE. n. ſ. [corrupted from amice.] A prieſt's veſtment. Dict.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. ſ. [ἀμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenneſs; ſo called, either becauſe it is not quite of the colour of wine, or becauſe it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious ſtone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyſt is the hardeſt, ſcarceſt, and moſt valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though ſome are purple, and others white like the diamond. The Germans have a violet colour, and the Spaniſh are of three ſorts, the beſt are the blackeſt or deepeſt violet; others are almoſt quite white, and ſome few tinctured with yellow. The amethyſt is not extremely hard, but eaſy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Summary. Chambers.

Some ſtones approached the granite complexion, and ſeveral nearly reſembled the amethyſt. Woodward.

A'METHYST [in heraldry] ſignifies the ſame colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHY'STINE. adj. [from amethyſt.] Reſembling an amethyſt in colour.

A kind of amethyſtine flint, not compoſed of cryſtals or grains, but one entire maſſy ſtone. Grew.

A'MIABLE. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleaſing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable alſo. Hooker.

She told her, while ſhe kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, ſubdue my father
Entirely to her love; but if ſhe loſt it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakeſp. Othello.

2. Pretending love; ſhewing love.

Lay amiable ſiege to the honeſty of this Ford's wife; uſe your art of wooing. Shakeſpeare.

A'MIABLENESS. n. ſ. [from amiable.] The quality quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addison.

A'MIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage.

O grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mild, each amicable guest;
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS. n. s. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness; goodwill.

A'MICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see
Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,
Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt
O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conquest. Philips.

I found my projects amicably join
To lessen their defects by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland also, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republick. Swift's Church of England Man.

A'MICE. n. s. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis episcopo & presbyteris communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, & pectus tegitur, castitatem interioris hominis designat: tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet; stringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transiat mendacium. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus past'd the night so foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey. Milton.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white,
Attends. Pope.

AMI'D. } prep. [from a and mid, or
AMI'DST. } midst.]

1. In the midst; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree amidst
The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the lagnio, and Donatello's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,
The boar amidst my crystal streams I bring,
And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryden.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryden.

3. Amongst; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor sound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addison.

AMI'SS. adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English particle, which shews any thing, like the Greek ϖαρά, to be wrong, as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is yet amiss, when it is truly done. Shakesp. King John.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not! Addison.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they construe'd all amiss,
And thought she wish'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fanfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, who the case is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conscience. Tillotson.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;
Yet I am somewhat better born than you. Dryd.

I built a wall, and when the masons played the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort. Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well today.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss. Hamlet.

AMI'SSION. n. s. [amissio, Lat.] Loss.

To AMI'T. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a constitence or determination of its diffluency, and amittah not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MITY. n. s. [amitié, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war; or among the people, opposed to discord; or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord. Shakesp.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplored ashes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMO'NIAC. n. s. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agasyllis. Pliny calls the tree metopion, which, he says, grows near the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns where the crowds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who travelling upon camels, and those creatures in Cyrene, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyreniac. No more of this salt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing: but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Aetna.

The modern sal ammoniac is made in Egypt; where long-necked glass bottles, filled with soot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a paste at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which stick to the top of the bottle, and are taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only soot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of soot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac salt.

Human blood calcined, yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniac; for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

AMMU-

AMMUNI'TION. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by ſome to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, ſeems to have ſignified ſupply of proviſion; but it ſurely may be more reaſonably derived from munitio, fortification; choſes à munitions, things for the fortreſſes.] Military ſtores.

They muſt make themſelves defenſible againſt ſtrangers; and muſt have the aſſiſtance of ſome able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel ſtaid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarend n.

All the rich mines of learning ranſacket are,
To furniſh ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his ſtores of ammunition ſpent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon ſent,
And ſolitary guns are ſcarcely heard. Dryden

AMMUNI'TION BREAD. n. ſ. Bread for the ſupply of the armies or garriſons.

A'MNESTY. n. ſ [ἀμνηστία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes againſt the government, to a certain time, are ſo obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may falely commit upon the laſt of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the firſt of July; by which the greateſt criminals may eſcape, provided they continue long enough in power to antiquate their crimes, and, by ſtifling them a while, deceive the legiſlature into an amneſty. Swift

AMNI'COLIST. n. ſ. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. Dict.

AMNI'GENOUS. n. ſ. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

AMNION. } n. ſ. [Lat. perhaps from
AMNIOS. } ἄμνος.]

The innermoſt membrane with which the fœtus in the womb is moſt immediately covered, and with which the reſt of the ſecundine, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It alſo contains a nutritious humour, ſeparated by glands for that purpoſe, with which the fœtus is preſerved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane and the chorion, which ſometimes ſtick ſo cloſe to one another, that they can ſcarce be ſeparated. It has alſo its veſſels from the ſame origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM. n. ſ. [Lat.] A ſort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioſcorides ſuppoſe it to be a fruit different from ours. The modern ammomum appears to be the ſiſon of the ancient, or baſtard ſtone-parſley. It reſembles the muſcat grape. This fruit is brought from the Eaſt Indies, and makes part of treacle. It is of a hot ſpicy taſte and ſmell. Trevoux. Chambers.

AMO'NG. } prep. [amang, gemang, Sax.
AMO'NGST. } on.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other perſons or things on every ſide.

Amongſt ſtrawberries ſow here and there ſome borage-ſeed; and you ſhall find the ſtrawberries under thoſe leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by ſoft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his preſence hid themſelves, among
The thickeſt trees, both man and wife. Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, ſo as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you ſee, obſerved the failings of many great wits amongſt the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman ſtatues, ſeveral of Venus in different poſtures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the ſame deſign. Addiſon.

A'MORIST. n. ſ. [from amour.] An inamorato; a gallant; a man profeſſing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though catſuities ſhould ſpare them, age brings in a neceſſity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white perplexed by incertainty both of the continuance of their miſtreſs's kindneſs, and her beauty, both which are neceſſary to the amoriſt's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMORO'SO. n. ſ. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'MOROUS. adj. [amoroſo, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakeſpeare, on.

Sure my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakeſpeare.

The amorous maſter own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembled as he drew,
Each ſtowing line confirm'd his firſt ſurprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the paſſion grew.
Prior.

2. Naturally inclined to love; diſpoſed to fondneſs; fond.

Apes, as ſoon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eye faſtened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty, ſo amorous is nature of what ſhe produces. Dryden's Dedication.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not ſhap'd for ſportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glaſs,
I, that am rudely ſtamp't. Shakeſp. Rich. III

And inſtill all things from her amorous ſtill
The ſpirit of love, and amorous delight. Milton.

In the amorous net
Firſt caught their looſe, their gazing poſtures grow. Milton.

O! how I long my each of limbs to fling
Under the ſhadow of ſome love, and all the day
With amorous ſighs now to my miſtreſs play,
Invoke the muſe, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou waſt ſwum in that love-bath,
Each fiſh, which every channel hath,
Will amorouſly to thee ſwim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondneſs; lovingneſs; love.

All Gyneca's actions were interpreted by Baſilius, as proceeding from jealouſy of his amorouſneſs. Sidney.

Lindamor has wit, and amorouſneſs enough to make him find it more eaſy to befriend fair ladies, than to defend himſelf againſt them.
Boyle on Colours.

AMO'RT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the ſtate of the dead; dejected; depreſſed; ſpiritleſs.

How fares my Kate? what, ſweeting, all amort?
Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. } n. ſ. [amortiſſement,
AMO'RTIZEMENT. } amortiſſible, Fr.]

The right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to ſome community, that never is to ceaſe.

Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial proviſion for them, after the laws of amortization were deviſed and put in uſe by princes.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild, or fraternity, and their ſucceſſors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.

This old concern the kingdom, to have farms ſufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people. Bacon.

To AMO'VE. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a poſt or ſtation: a juridical ſenſe.

2. To remove; to move; to alter: a ſenſe now out of uſe.

Therewith, amoved from his ſober mood,
And lives he yet, ſaid he, that wrought me act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food?
Fairy Queen.

At her ſpiteous cry was much amov'd
Her champion ſtout. Fairy Queen.

To AMO'UNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To riſe to in the accumulative quantity; to compoſe in the whole; with the particle to. It is uſed of ſeveral ſums in quantities added together.

Let us conſider particularly how much this will amount to, or how many ocean of water would neceſſarily be compoſed this great ocean by vapours and air, without land or banks. Burnet's Theory.

2. It is uſed, figuratively, of the conſequence riſing from any thing taken altogether.

[illegible] ſtrength of the [illegible] that [illegible] ſhould [illegible] another. Bacon.

Judgment of the [illegible] wrong ſide of the [illegible] affectation of ſkill, [illegible] Eſſtrange.

AMO'UNT. n. ſ. [from To amount.] The ſum total, the reſult of ſeveral ſums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life,
Where the moſt ſubtle and the wiſeſt part
Of your amount is only vain and void,
Vexation, drudgery, diſappointment, and remorſe. Thomſon.

AMO'UR. n. ſ. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally uſed of vitious love. The ou ſounds like oo in poor.

No man is of ſo general and diffuſive a luſt, as to proſecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never ſo outrageouſly, yet the impure flame will either die of itſelf, or conſume the body that harbours it. South.

The reſtleſs youth ſearch'd all the world round;
But how can Jove in his amours be found?
Addiſon.

A'MPER. n. ſ. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word ſaid, by Skinner, to be much in uſe in Eſſex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHI'BIOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βίος.]

1. That which partakes of two natures, ſo as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beaſt, a fiſh in water. Hudibras.

Thoſe are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are obſerved to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of thoſe creatures that live at eaſe, and by choice, a good while,

while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

2. Of a mixt nature, in allusion to animals that live in air and water.

Traulus of amphibious breed,
Motley from oft'n ungrel feed;
By the dam from lordings sprung,
By the sire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

AMPHI'BIOUSNESS. n. s. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY. n. s. [ἀμφιβολογία] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, nolo regem occidere, tamere locum est, is amphibology; occidere leporem, meaning, by hyperbole, either hares or jests, is equivocation.

Now the reason, which by many deceived others, and by some deceived themselves, the ancient have delivered in this kind, is the ambiguity of the words; for from hence they conclude from whence they are but two sorts of deception, the falling into equivocation, or amphibology.

Sir T. Browne's Vulgar Errours.

If [illegible] be words to [illegible],
Then [illegible] equivocation,
Then [illegible] amphibology.

Hudibras.

In doubtful questions, [illegible] which more [illegible] than [illegible] misled by ambiguity [illegible] fallacious deduction. Government of the Tongue.

AMPHI'BOLOUS. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βάλλω.] Tossed from one to another; striking each way.

Nevertheless their fickle [illegible] both parties declare themselves for the King, and reckoning [illegible] their remonstrances, to nullify their actions. Howell.

AMPHI'BOLY. n. s. [ἀμφὶ and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Dict.

AMPHISBE'NA. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφισβαίνα.] A serpent supposed to have two heads, and by consequence to move with either end foremost.

That the amphisæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire. Milton.

AMPHISCII. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of ἀμφὶ and σκία, a shadow.] Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways, to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs; and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. s. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφὶ and θέομαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another; where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.

Conceive a man placed in the Lyonese iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat, or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul among the exquisite sufferings of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Addison.

A'MPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n defends
In universal bounty, shedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Do not letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?——

She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without restriction.

Thus while you take your presents I receive;
Dare where and when you please, with ample leave.
Dryden.

4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to requite man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceeds that so far the other's value. Hooker.

5. Magnificent; splendid.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative, that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. s. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the place you bear. Swift.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall look upon it, not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate. Bacon.

AMPLIA'TION. n. s. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Holder.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. s. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. s. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorilaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to increase any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon.

All crevices that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as men's opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

The general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakesp.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

In paraphrase the author's words are not strictly followed, his sense too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's translation of Virgil. Dryden.

I see age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

An excellent medicine for the stone might be conceived, by amplifying speculations able to break a diamond. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others, but here, where the subject is so fruitful, that the harveſt overcomes the reaper, I am ſhortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, ſo they might be men of great ſtature, or giants. Pope's Odyſſey.

AMPLITUDE. n. ſ. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville.

2. Largeneſs; greatneſs.

Men ſhould learn how ſevere a thing the true inquiſition of nature is, and accuſtom themſelves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowneſs of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity; extent of intellectual faculties.

With more than human gifts from heav'n adorn'd,
Perfections abſolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greateſt deeds. Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or eſtates, to add amplitude and greatneſs to their kingdoms. Bacon's Eſſays.

5. Copiouſneſs; abundance.

You ſhould ſay every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulneſs of your diſcourſe, to your great deſign; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line ſubtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in aſtronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true eaſt and weſt point thereof, and the centre of the ſun or ſtar at its riſing or ſetting: It is eaſtern or ortive, when the ſtar riſes; and weſtern or occiduous, when the ſtar ſets. The eaſtern or weſtern amplitude are alſo called northern or ſouthern, as they fall in the northern or ſouthern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude is an arch of the horizon contained between the ſun at his riſing, and the eaſt or weſt point of the compaſs; or, it is the difference of the riſing or ſetting of the ſun, from the eaſt or weſt parts of the compaſs. Chambers.

AMPLY. adv. [ample, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For who ſo well-being,
So amply, and with hands ſo liberal,
Thou haſt provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were reſolved not to be convinced: and to thoſe, who are reſolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments, are equal. Atterbury.

2. At large; without reſerve.

At return
Of him ſo lately promiſed to thy aid,
The woman's ſeed, obſcurely then foretold,
Now amply known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Milton.

3. At large; copiouſly; with a diffuſive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others muſt be caſt into ſhadows; that is, paſſed over in ſilence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

To AMPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word uſed only in chirurgery.

Amongſt the cruizers, it was complained, that their ſurgeons were too active in amputating fractured members. Wiſeman's Surgery.

AMPUTA'TION. n. ſ. [amputatio, Lat.] The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body. The uſual method of performing it, in the inſtance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the ſkin and fleſh are firſt to be drawn very tight upwards, and ſecured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another looſe one is paſſed, for the gripe; which being twiſted by means of a ſtick, may be ſtraitened to any degree at pleaſure. Then the patient being conveniently ſituated, and the operator placed to the inſide of the limb, which is to be held by one aſſiſtant above, and another below the part deſigned for the operation, and the gripe ſufficiently twiſted to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the fleſh is, with a ſtroke or two, to be ſeparated from the bone with the diſmembering knife. Then the periоſtium being alſo divided from the bone with the back of the knife, ſaw the bone aſunder, with as few ſtrokes as poſſible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the fleſh that grows between them muſt likewiſe be ſeparated before the uſe of the ſaw. This being done, the gripe may be ſlackened, to give an opportunity of ſearching for the large blood veſſels, and ſecuring the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the ſtump, looſen the firſt ligature, and pull both the ſkin and the fleſh, as far as conveniently may be, over the ſtump, to cover it; and ſecure them with the croſs ſtitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the ſkin. Then apply pledgets, aſtringents, plaiſters, and other neceſſaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breaſt, had the freer uſe of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AMULET. n. ſ. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, or am letum, quod malum amolitur, Lat.] An appended remedy, or preſervative; a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of ſome particular diſeaſes.

That ſpirits are corporeal, ſeems at firſt view a conceit derogative unto himſelf; yet herein he eſtabliſheth the doctrine of luſtrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They do not certainly know the falſity of what they report; and their ignorance muſt ſerve you as an amulet againſt the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. ſ. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing. Dict.

To AMU'SE. v. a. [amuſer, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without diſtracting it. To divert implies ſomething more lively, and to phraſe, ſomething more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a ſenſe bordering on contempt.

They think they ſee viſions, and are arrived to ſome extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuſe themſelves with the fantaſtick ideas of a buſy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuſe himſelf with trifles. Walſh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amuſed his followers with idle promiſes.

AMU'SEMENT. n. ſ. [amuſement, Fr.] That which amuſes; entertainment.

Every intereſt or pleaſure of life, even the moſt trifling amuſement, is preferred to poſtpone the moſt thing neceſſary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amuſement was to give poiſon to dogs and cats, and ſee them expire by ſlower or quicker torments. Pope.

I was left to ſtand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleaſant amuſement to look on with Piety, whilſt another was giving them diverſion at the hazard of his life. Swift.

AMU'SER. n. ſ. [amuſeur, Fr.] He that amuſes, as with falſe promiſes. The French word is always taken in an ill ſenſe.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuſe.] That which has the power of amuſing. I know not that this is a current word.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amuſive arch before him fly,
Then vaniſh quite away. Thomſon.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; reſembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon; een, Dutch; eine, German.] The article indefinite, uſed before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with leſs emphaſis; as, there ſtands a houſe.

Since he cannot be always employed in ſtudy, reading, and converſation, there will be many an hour, both by what his exercites will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or ſome; as, an elephant might ſwim in this water.

He was not guilty of any uncertainty, nor even in the leaſt at a loſs what courſe to take in any breach of it. Locke.

A wiſe man teaches, and not a rod,
An uſeful man's the nobleſt work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it ſignifies, like a, ſome particular ſtate; but this is now diſuſed.

It is certain that odours do, in a manner, give grace, nouriſh, eſpecially the odour of roſes, and we ſee men an hungred do love to ſmell to a piece of Bacon.

4. An is ſometimes, in old authors, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honeſt mind and plain; he muſt ſpeak truth,
An they will take it, ſo; if not, he's plain. Shakeſp.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on 's face that had it.
—— He will an' if he live to be a man. Shakeſp.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correſpondent, like Shakeſpeare's lion in Pyramus and Thiſbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addiſon.

A'NA. adv. [ἀνὰ.] A word uſed in the preſcriptions of phyſick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the ſame weight innocence and prudence take,
Ana of each does the juſt mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

A'NA. n. ſ. Books ſo called from the laſt ſyllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are looſe thoughts, or caſual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACA'MPTICK. adj. [ἀνακάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick ſound, ſound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACA'MPTICKS. n. ſ. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANACATHA'RTICK. n. ſ. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀνακεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation, or ſummary of the principal heads of a diſcourſe. Dict.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. ſ. [ſometimes vitiANA'CHORITE. } ouſly written anchorite; ἀναχωρήτης.] A monk who, with the leave of his ſuperiour, leaves the convent for a more auſtere and ſolitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth ſit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. ſ. [from ἀνά and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are miſplaced with regard to each other. It ſeems properly to ſignify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally uſed for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachroniſm, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries. For it is certain, that the hero lived almoſt two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

ANACLA'STICKS. n. ſ. [ἀνά and κλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the laſt word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the firſt of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidſt all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtues brought upon him.

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγωγικός.] That which contributes or relates to ſpiritual elevation, or religious raptures; myſterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

ANAGOGICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Myſterious; elevated; religiouſly exalted. Dict.

ANAGO'GICALLY. adv. [from anagogical.] Myſteriouſly; with religious elevation.

A'NAGRAM. n. ſ. [ἀνά and γράμμα.] A conceit ariſing from the letters of a name tranſpoſed; as this, of William Lyſtar, a myrrour for knaves, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th'uſual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face.
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words what could we ſay?
Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchaſe fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRA'MMATISM. n. ſ. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quinteſſence that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatiſm, or metagrammatiſm, which is a diſſolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial tranſpoſition, without adultion, ſubſtraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making ſome perfect ſenſe appliable to the perſon named. Camden.

ANAGRA'MMATIST. n. ſ. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE. v. n. [anagrammatiſer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALE'PTICK. adj. [ἀναληπτικός.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of phyſick.

Analeptick medicines cheriſh the nerves, and renew the ſpirits and ſtrength. Quincy.

ANA'LOGAL. adj. [from analogous.] Analogous; having relation.

When I ſee many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I ſee them ſpontaneous, I have reaſon to conclude that theſe in their principle are not ſimply mechanical. Hale.

ANALO'GICAL. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Uſed by way of analogy. It ſeems properly diſtinguiſhed from analogous, as words from things; analogous ſignifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of repreſenting relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeneſs, but by analogical repreſentation. Stillingfleet.

When a word, which originally ſignifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to ſeveral other objects, not by way of reſemblance, but on the account of ſome evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; ſo a ſound or healthy pulſe, a ſound digeſtion, ſound ſleep, are ſo called, with reference to a ſound and healthy conſtitution; but if you ſpeak of ſound doctrine, or ſound ſpeech, this is by way of reſemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2. Analogous; having reſemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating ſomething analogical to either. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the ſimplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is ſome one univerſal principle, running through the whole ſyſtem of creatures analogally, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne.

ANALO'GICALNESS. n. ſ. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitneſs to be applied for the illuſtration of ſome analogy.

ANA'LOGISM. n. ſ. [ἀναλογισμός.] An argument from the cauſe to the effect.

To ANA'LOGIZE. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; to form ſome reſemblance between different things; to conſider ſomething with regard to its analogy with ſomewhat elſe.

We have ſyſtems of material bodies, adroitly figured and ſituated, if ſeparately conſidered; they repreſent the object of our deſire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Cheyne.

ANA'LOGOUS. adj. [ἀνὰ and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing ſome reſemblance or proportion; having ſomething parallel.

Exerciſe makes things eaſy, that would be otherwiſe very hard to us, as labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is ſomething analogous in the exerciſe of the mind to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that make us delicate and froward. L'Eſtrange.

Many important conſequences may be drawn from the obſervation of the moſt common things, and analogous reaſonings from the cauſes of them. Arbuthnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the reſemblance is noted.

This incorporeal ſubſtance may have ſome ſort of exiſtence, analogous to corporeal extenſion; though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANA'LOGY. n. ſ. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Reſemblance between things with regard to ſome circumſtances or effects; as learning is ſaid to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to diſcover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a preſcript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the ſame, yet, for the moſt part, retaining the ſame analogy. Hooker.

What I here obſerve of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to thoſe communications of God's will, that are requiſite to ſalvation. South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is ſuppoſed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is uſed.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were neceſſary in a body diſtempered ſtate. Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the ſame with that of the preſent earth. Burnet's Theory.

If we make Juvenal expreſs the cuſtoms of our country, rather than of Rome, it is when there was ſome analogy betwixt the cuſtoms. Dryden.

3. By grammarians, it is uſed to ſignify the agreement of ſeveral words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved; from hate, hated; from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS. n. ſ. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A ſeparation of a compound body into the ſeveral parts of which it conſiſts.

There is an account of dew falling, in ſome places, in the form of butter, or greaſe, which grows extremely fetid; ſo that the analyſis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the beſt method of finding ſuch contents of the air as are within the reach of the ſun. Arbuthnot.

2. A conſideration of any thing in parts, ſo as that one particular is firſt conſidered, then another.

Our buſineſs conſiſts in making experiments and obſervations, and in drawing general concluſions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections but ſuch as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opticks.

3. A ſolution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its firſt elements; as, of a ſentence to the ſingle words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to ſingle notes; of an argument, to ſimple propoſitions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analyſis to its firſt principles, till we know the firſt ſprings of natural motions, we are ſtill but ignorants. Glanville.

ANALY'TICAL. adj. [from analyſis.]

1. That which reſolves any thing into firſt principles; that which ſeparates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be probably maintained, ſince the inaccurateneſs of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analyſis, or by taking the parts of a compound into diſtinct and particular conſideration.

Deſcartes hath here infinitely gotten all the philosophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses. Glanville.

ANALY'TICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In such a manner as separates compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALY'TICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικὸς.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts, applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly skill'd in analytick. Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution. Watts's Logick.

To A'NALYZE, v. a. [ἀναλυω.] To resolve a compound into its first principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chemistry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in some measure, to analyze them, and take asunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to present them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its last principles; if it be enquired, why such an action is to be avoided, the immediate answer is because it is sin. Norris's Miscell.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, adjunct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly meant in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture. Watts's Logick.

A'NALYZER. n. s. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reasons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHO'SIS. n. s. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perspective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confused to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANANAS. n. s. The pine-apple.

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pine-apple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pine apple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine-apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Pine-apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any spines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine. Miller.

Witness thou best ananas, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomson.

ANANAS, wild. The same with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANAPHORA. n. s. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or sound; as, Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?

ANAPLEROTICK. adj. ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; used of applications which promote flesh.

ANARCH. [See ANARCHY.] An author of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring speech, and visage incompos'd,
Answer'd. Milton.

ANA'RCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confused; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit. Cheyne.

A'NARCHY. n. s. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable; a state without magistracy.

Where eldest Night
And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand. Milton.

Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, or the savage life; the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASA'RCA. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and σαρξ.] A sort of dropsy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anasarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANASA'RCOUS. adj. [from anasarca.] Relating to an anasarca; partaking of the nature of an anasarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an ascites, with an anasarcous swelling of her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiseman.

ANASTOMA'TICK. adj. [fron ἀνα and στόμα.] That which has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS. n. s. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] The inosculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANASTROPHE. n. s. [ἀναστροφὴ, a preposterous placing, from ἀναστρέφω.] A figure whereby words which should have been precedent, are postponed.

ANATHEMA. n. s. [ἀνάθημα.]

1. A curse pronounced by ecclesiastical authority; excommunication.

Her bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the schismatical; who think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from the body, which they choose not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curse, or person cursed. This seems the original meaning, though now little used.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY. v. a. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To ANATHE'MATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized, and, with detestation, branded and banished out of the church. Hammond.

ANATI'FEROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks. Not in use.

If there be anatiferous trees, whose corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOCISM. n. s. [anatocismus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμὸς.] The accumulation of interest upon interest; the addition of the interest due for money lent, to the original sum. A species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATO'MICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of division, it has the use of an anatomical knife, which dissects an animal body, and separates the veins, arteries, nerves, muscles, membranes, &c. and shews us the several parts which go to the composition of a complete animal. Watts's Logick.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; considered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary distortion of the muscles, which is the anatomical cause of laughter; but there is another cause of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; dissected; separated.

The continuation of solidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from hardness. Locke.

ANATO'MICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the sense of an anatomist; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While some affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have construed anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOMIST. n. s. [ἀνατομὸς.] He that studies the structure of animal bodies, by means of dissection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to discover the various parts.

Anatomists adjudged, that if nature had been suffered to run her own course, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel.

Hence when anatomists discourse,
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love odes, dogs bark satire.
Prior.

To ANA'TOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.]

1. To dissect an animal; to divide the body into its component or constituent parts.

Our industry must even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker.

2. To lay any thing open distinctly, and by minute parts.

I speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and then must look pale and wonder. Shakesp.

Then dark distinctions reason's light disguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham.

ANA'TOMY. n. s. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of dissecting the body.

It is proverbially said, Formicæ fua bilis inest, habet et musca splenem; whereas these parts anatomy hath not discovered in insects.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much such finer nerves and vessels, as will for ever escape our observation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the structure of the body, learned by dissection.

Let the muscles be well inserted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

3. The

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his chests, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts. Bacon.

4. The body stripped of its integuments; a skeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a passion I would shake the world,
And rouze from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakesp.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre person.

This your right one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakesp. Comedy of Errours.

A'NATRON. n. s. The scum which swims upon the molten glass in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then congulates into common salt. It is likewise that salt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. s. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. s. [ancestor, Lat. ancestre, Fr.] One from whom a person descends, either by the father or the mother. It is distinguished from predecessor; which is not, like ancestor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch succeeds to his ancestors; an elective, to his predecessors.

And shall be buried with his ancestors,
O, in a town where never learning crept,
Since this of hers. Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

Cham was the paternal ancestor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; who was son Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obscure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
My father, grandsire, and great grandsire too:
If farther I derive my pedigree,
I can but guess beyond the fourth degree.
The rest of my forgotten ancestors
Were sons of earth, like him, or sons of whores.
Dryden.

A'NCESTREL. adj. [from ancestor.] Claimed from ancestors; relating to ancestors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions ancestrel, was anciently so here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY. n. s. [from ancestor.]

1. Lineage; a series of ancestors, or progenitors; the persons who compose the lineage.

Phædon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
Mine ancestry from famous Coradin,
Who first to raise our house to honour did begin.
Spenser.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties transmitted from a wise and virtuous ancestry publick spirit, and a love of one's country, are the support and ornaments of government.
Addison.

Say from what sceptre'd ancestry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathless fame? Pope.

2. The honour of descent; birth.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible.
Addison.

A'NCHENTRY. n. s. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and ancientry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. s. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, composed of a long shank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is fastened, and at the other branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each side. Its use is to hold the ship, by being fixed to the ground.

He said, and wept; then spread his sails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cumæan shore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the vessels moor.
Dryden.

2. It is used, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers stability or security.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. Hebrews.

3. The forms of speech in which it is most commonly used, are, to cast anchor, to lie or ride at anchor.

The Turkish general, perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at sea, withdrew his fleet, when casting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd, and made with hausers fast.
Dryden.

Far from your capital my ship resides
At Reith us, and secure at anchor rides. Pope.

To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]

1. To cast anchor; to lie at anchor.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock. Shakesp. King Lear.

Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.

Or the first course to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimas' shaggy brow. Pope.

2. To stop at; to rest on.

My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel. Shakespeare.

To A'NCHOR. v. a.

1. To place at anchor; as, he anchored his ship.

2. To fix on.

My tongue should to my ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes.
Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. s. Shakespeare seems to have used this word for anchoret, or an abstemious recluse person.

To operation turn my trust and hope!
An anchor's cheer in prison be my scope!
Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. s. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or fastness of the anchor; and, figuratively, security.

The old English could express most aptly all the concents of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy service of God, which the Latins called religion, because it knitted the minds of men together, and most people of Europe have borrowed the same from them, they called most significantly our fastness, as the one and only assurance and fast anchor-hold of our souls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. s. [from anchor and smith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which use either forge or file, from the anchor-smith to the watchmaker; they all working by the same rules, though not with equal exactness; and all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Moxon.

A'NCHORAGE. n. s. [from anchor.]

1. The hold of the anchor.

Let me resolve whether there be indeed such efficacy in nurture and first production; for if that supposal should fail us, all our anchorage were loose, and we should but wander in a wild sea.
Wotton.

2. The set of anchors belonging to a ship.

The bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage.
Shakespeare.

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED. particip. adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well-twisted cable, holding fast
The anchor'd vessel in the loudest blast. Waller.

A'NCHORET. } n. s. [contracted from
A'NCHORITE. } anachoret, ἀναχωρήτης.] A recluse; a hermit; one that retires to the more severe duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himself.
Sprat.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY. n. s. [from anchova, Span. or anchoe, Ital. of the same signification.] A little sea-fish, much used by way of sauce, or seasoning. Savary.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as the salt-acid gravies of meat; the salt pickles of fish, anchovies, oysters. Flyer.

A'NCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]

1. Old; that happened long since; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are distinguished; old relates to the duration of the thing itself, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dress, a habit used in former times. But this is not always observed, for we mention old customs; but though old be sometimes opposed to modern, ancient is seldom opposed to new, but when new means modern.

Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conquerour's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common persons, he caused to be written in a book, after a survey made of them, now remaining in the Exchequer, and called Doomsday Book; and such as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demesnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.

With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days understanding. Job, xii. 12.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient, because he never had any beginning. Raleigh.

Industry
Gave the tall ancients forest to his axe. Thomson.

3. Past; former.

I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakesp.

A'NCIENT. n. s. [from ancient, adj.]

1. Those

1. Thoſe that lived in old time were called ancients, oppoſed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings diſpenſe with laws themſelves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you muſt offend
Againſt the precept, ne'er tranſgreſs its end.
Pope.

2. Senior: not in uſe.

He toucheth it as a ſpecial pre-eminence of Junias and Andronicus, that in Chriſtianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

A'NCIENT. n. ſ.

1. The flag or ſtreamer of a ſhip, and, formerly, of a regiment.

2. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Piſtol; whence, in preſent uſe, enſign.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it,
The ſame indeed, a very valiant fellow. Shakeſp.

A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Trebilond anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjuſtly poſſeſſed, and as unjuſtly abuſed, by thoſe who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only, but to any other plant, becauſe it draweth ſtrongly the fatteſt juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS. n. ſ. [from ancient.] Antiquity; exiſtence from old times.

The Feſcennine and Saturnian were the ſame; they were called Saturnian from their ancientneſs, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY. n. ſ. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the moſt mingled, and moſt uncertain. Wherefore, moſt fooliſhly do the Iriſh think to ennoble themſelves, by wreſting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himſelf from any in certain. Spenſer on Ireland.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, ſtealing, fighting. Shakeſpeare.

ANCLE. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY. n. ſ. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two ſquare rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

AND. conjunction.

1. The particle by which ſentences or terms are joined, which it is not eaſy to explain by any ſynonimous word.

Sure his honeſty
Got him ſmall gain, but ſhameleſs flattery
And filthy beverage, and unſeemly thrift,
And borrow baſe, and ſome good lady's gift.
Spenſer.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.

The Danes unconquer'd offſpring march behind;
And Morini, the laſt of human kind. Dryden.

It ſhall ever be my ſtudy to make diſcoveries of this nature in human life, and to ſettle the proper diſtinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and thoſe falſe colours and reſemblances of them that ſhine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addiſon.

And ſometimes ſignifies though, and ſeems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme fell lovers, as they will ſet an houſe on fire, and it were but to roaſt their eggs. Bacon.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I pray thee, Launce, an' if thou ſeeſt my boy,
Bid him make haſte Shakeſpeare's Two Gent. of Verona.

A'NDIRON. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may ſupply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the ſpit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you ſtrike an entire body, as an andiron of braſs, at the top, it maketh a more treble ſound, and at the bottom a baſer. Bacon.

ANDRO'GYNAL. adj. [from ἀνὴρ and γύνη.] Having two ſexes; hermaphroditical.

ANDRO'GYNALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of hermaphrodites; with two ſexes.

The examples hereof have undergone no real or new tranſexion, but were androgynally born, and under ſome kind of hermaphrodite. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANDRO'GYNOUS. adj. The ſame with androgynal.

ANDRO'GYNUS. n. ſ. [See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both ſexes.

ANDRO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀνὴρ and τέμνω.] The practice of cutting human bodies. Dict.

ANEMO'METER. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and μέτρον.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure the ſtrength or velocity of the wind.

ANEMONE. n. ſ. [ἀνεμώνη.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its ſingle ſtalk, ſurrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many ſtamina in the centre; the ſeeds are collected into a globoſe head, and ſurrounded with copious down. The principal colours in anemones, are white, red, blue, and purple, ſometimes curiouſly interwoven. Miller.

Wood flowers are diſtinguiſhed into thoſe with broad and long leaves, and thoſe with narrow and long ones. The moſt beautiful anemony roots ſhould be planted about the end of September. Thoſe with finer leaves muſt not be put into the ground till the end of October. Mortimer.

From the ſoft wing of vernal breezes ſhed,
Anemonies, immortal, reared'd
With ſhining meal o'er all their velvet leaves.
Thomſon.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and σκοπέω.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been obſerved, that hygroſcopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoſcopes, ſeldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the ſhifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANE'NT. prep. A word uſed in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he ſaid nothing anent that particular.

2. Over againſt; oppoſite to; as, he lives anent the market-houſe.

ANES. } n. ſ. The ſpires or beards of AWNS. } corn. Dict.

A'NEURISM. n. ſ. [ἀνευρύνω.] A diſeaſe of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakneſs of any part of them, they become exceſſively dilated; or, by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravaſated amongſt the adjacent cavities. Sharp.

In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneuriſm. Wiſeman.

ANE'W. adv. [from a and new.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the moſt common uſe.

Nor, if at miſchief taken, on the ground
Be ſlain, but priſ'ners to the pillars bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade.
Dryden.

That, as in birth, in beauty you excel,
The muſe might dictate, and the poet tell:
Your art no other art can ſpeak; and you,
To ſhow how well you play, muſt play anew.
Prior.

The miſeries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our iſland from the thoughts of engaging anew in ſuch deſperate undertakings. Addiſon.

2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole diſpoſition of his ſoul, to acquire new habit of life, to practiſe duties to which he is otherwiſe a ſtranger. Rogers.

ANFRA'CTUOSE. } adj. [from anfractus,
ANFRA'CTUOUS. } Lat.] Winding; mazy; full of turnings and winding paſſages.

Beſ nd the drum are ſpiral vaults and anfractuoſe cavities of the ear bone, ſo to intend the ſound agreeable, that the ſame not be affected within, as we ſee in ſolitary rooms and vaults, how the ſound is reverbed. Ray.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from anfractuous.] Fulneſs of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE. n. ſ. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Dict.

A'NGEL. n. ſ. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originally a meſſenger. A ſpirit employed by God in the adminiſtration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His meſſage ere he come. Shakeſpeare.

Had we both a knowledge of the conſtitution of man, as it is poſſible angels have, and it is certain he has, Milton's; we ſhould have a quite other idea of his eſſence. Locke.

2. Angel is ſometimes uſed in a bad ſenſe; as, angels of darkneſs.

And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomleſs pit. Revelations.

3. Angel, in ſcripture, ſometimes means man of God, prophet.

4. Angel is uſed, in the ſtyle of love, for a beautiful perſon.

Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a ſoul, ſhe is an angel. Shakeſpeare.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impreſſed with an angel, in memory of an obſervation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or Engliſh, were ſo beautiful, that, if they were Chriſtians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten ſhillings.

Take an empty baſon, put an angel of gold, or what what you will, into it; then go so far from the basin, till you cannot see the angel, because it is not in a right line; then fill the basin with water, and you will see it out of its place, because of the reflection. Bacon.

Shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set them at liberty. Shakespeare.

AN'GEL. adj. Resembling angels; angelical.

I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
Start into her face; a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness bear away those blushes.
Shakspeare.

Or virgins visited by angel powers,
With golden crowns, and wreaths of heav'nly flow'rs. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

A'NGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Resembling an angel.

In heav'nly beauty she was next dress't
With that angel-like disguise. Waller.

A'NGEL-SHOT. n. s. [perhaps properly angle shot, being folden together with a hinge.] Chain-shot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Dict.

ANGE'LICA. n. s. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into huge segments, its stalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the stalk, and consist of five leaves, succeeded by two long channelled seeds.

The species are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with oblong narrow leaves. Miller.

ANGE'LICA. n. s. (Berry bearing) [Aralia, Lat.] The flower consists of many leaves, expanding in form of a rose, which are naked, growing on the upper end of the ovary: these flowers are succeeded by globular fruits, which are soft and succulent, and full of oval seeds. Miller.

ANGE'LICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Resembling angels.

It discovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical swiftness, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his visible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild,
Retreated in a silent valley, sing
With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroick deeds, and hapless fall
By doom of battle. Milton.

3. Belonging to angels; suiting the nature or dignity of angels.

It may be encouragement to consider the pleasure of speculations, which do ravish and sublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wilkins's Dædalus.

ANGE'LICALNESS. n. s. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; resemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGE'LICK. adj. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angels; angelical; above human.

Here happy creature, fair angelick Eve,
Partake thou also. Milton.

My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind. Pope.

A'NGELOT. n. s. A musical instrument somewhat resembling a lute. Dict.

A'NGER. n. s. [A word of no certain etymology, but, with most probability, derived by Skinner from ange, Sax. vexed; which, however, seems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneasiness or discomposure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a present purpose of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakespeare.

Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers, was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation? Habb. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to some, a transient hatred, or at least very like it. South.

2. Pain, or smart, of a sore or swelling. In this sense it seems plainly deducible from angor.

I mean the experiment, setting the moxa where the first violence of my pain began, and where the greatest anger and soreness still continued, notwithstanding the swelling of my foot. Temple.

To A'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meanest artisan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant.
Shakspeare.

There were some late taxes and impositions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

2. To make painful.

He turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, and angereth malign ulcers and pernicious impostumations. Bacon.

A'NGERLY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended: it is now written angrily.

Why, how now, Hecat? you look angerly.
Shakspeare.

Such jesters disparage indiscretion, to rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angerly to be grieved at, or seriously to be contured. Carew.

ANGIO'GRAPHY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον and γράφω.] A description of vessels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphaticks.

ANGIO'LOGY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον and λόγος.] A treatise or discourse of the vessels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἀγγεῖον μόνος, and σπέρμα.] Such plants as have but one single seed in the seed-pod.

ANGIO'TOMY. n. s. [from ἀγγεῖον, and τέμνω, to cut.] A cutting open of the vessels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

A'NGLE. n. s. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The space intercepted between two lines intersecting or meeting, so as, if continued, they would intersect each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whose vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whose legs are two semidiameters of that circle. Stone's Dict.

A'NGLE. n. s. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An instrument to take fish, consisting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She also had an angle in her hand, but the taker was so taken, that she had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me thine angle, we'll to the river, there,
My musick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fish; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.

The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork and bending reed.
Pope.

To A'NGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fish with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the crystal lake,
Feast on the waters with the prey they take.
Waller.

2. To try to gain by some insinuating artifices, as fishes are caught by a bait.

If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts: if he were silent, he mused upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.

By this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shakesp.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakespeare.

A'NGLE-ROD. n. s. [angel roede, Dutch.] The stick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatness; the smallest being fit for thatching of houses; the second bigness is us'd for angle rods; and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furnishes the whole country with angle-rods. Addison.

A'NGLER. n. s. [from angle.] He that fishes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he stroke,
Would let them play a while upon the hook.
Dryden.

This fever, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regress into the mass, still gathers into a hard swelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and so dischargeth. Wiseman.

A'NGUISH. n. s. [angoisse, Fr. anger, Lat.] Excessive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of sorrow, and is seldom used to signify other passions.

Not all so fearful seemed she of sight,
As was her sister; who did dread it well,
Or anguish, in her heart, to hate to see. Fairy Queen.

Virtue's but anguish, when 'tis forced,
By occasion waked, and circumstanced;
True virtue's fixt to stand in all need still. Donne.

They had persecutors, whose invention was as great as their cruelty. Wits and malice conspired to find out such deaths, and those of such intolerable anguish, that only the manner of dying was the punishment, death itself the deliverance. Tillotson.

Perpetual anguish dims her anxious breast,
Not slept by business, nor composed by rest,
No muse shows him, nor no feuds appease. Dryden.

A'NGUISHED. adj. [from anguish.] Seized with anguish; tortured; excessively pained; not in use.

Feel no touch
Of conscience, but of fame, and be
Anguish'd, not that 'twas sin, but that 'twas shame. Donne.

A'NGULAR. adj. [from angle.]

1. Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of crystal, it is for the most part hexangular, or six cornered, being built upon a confused matter, from whence, as it were from a source, angular figures arise, even as in the antient buildings. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

1. The act of annexing.

2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,
Each ſmall annexment, petty conſequence,
Attends the boiſt'rous ruin. Shakeſpeare.

ANNI'HILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of exiſtence.

To ANNI'HILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of exiſtence.

It is impoſſible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that, as it was the work of the omnipotency of God to make ſomewhat of nothing, ſo it requireth the like omnipotency to turn ſomewhat into nothing. Bacon.

Thou taught'ſt me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practiſe this one way to annihilate all three. Donne.

He deſpaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Whoſe friendſhip can ſtand againſt aſſaults, ſtrong enough to annihilate the friendſhip of puny minds; ſuch an one has reached true conſtancy. South.

Some imagined, water ſufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the buſineſs was done, diſhanded and annihilated. Woodward.

2. To deſtroy, ſo as to make the thing otherwiſe than it was.

The flood hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, ſo as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh.

3. To annul; to deſtroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reaſon, that any one commonwealth ſhould annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNIHILA'TION. n. f. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The ſtate of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very eſſence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not chooſe but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as ſpirits we obtain,
Is to be valued in the midſt of pain:
Annihilation were to loſe heav'n more:
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can ſoar. Dryden.

ANNIVE[illegible]RY. n. f. [anniverſarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the courſe of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive chriſtians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praiſe God for them, and to obſerve the anniverſary of their ſufferings. Stillingfleet.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniverſary day.

Donne had never ſeen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniverſaries. Dryden.

3. Anniverſary is an office in the Romiſh church, celebrated now only once a year, but which ought to be ſaid daily through the year, for the ſoul of the deceaſed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNIVE'RSARY. adj. [anniverſarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, moſt conſtantly finiſhing its anniverſary viciſſitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worſhip to a creature, as inconſiſtent with chriſtianity; but confeſs the honour and eſteem for the martyrs, which they expreſſed by keeping their anniverſary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfleet.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the ſeventeen hundred and fifty firſt year from the birth of our Saviour.

By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the firſt I knew. Milt.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial ſentence.

Thoſe, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publiſh laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNO'Y. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to moleſt.

Woe to poor man, each outward thing annoys him,
He heaps in inward grief, that moſt deſtroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous preſence and ſweet company
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealouſy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Queen.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houſes thick, and ſewers, annoy the air,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages, and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Inſects ſeldom uſe their offenſive weapons, unleſs provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

ANNO'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] Injury; moleſtation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, ſleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakeſpeare.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring leſs annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themſelves the worſt they die. Denne.
What then remains, but, after paſt annoys,
To take the good viciſſitude of joys? Dryden.

ANNO'YANCE. n. f. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.

A gnat, a duſt, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe. Shakesp.
Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer.

2. The ſtate of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The ſpir venom of their poiſoned heart breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.

The greateſt annoyance and deſtruction of mankind has been from one of theſe two things, force or fraud. Swift.

For the further annoyance and terrour of every beſieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Howel.

A'NNUAL. adj. [annual, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual bring the grain, and fleſh, and fruits
The juice of cluſter, and the milky dews. Prior.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

Does purpoſe honeſty in you, to which
As oft as ſound power to puniſh, you add not,
Out of this place he adds. Speech of Henry VIII.

3. That which laſts only a year.

The dying on the wood of plants that are annual, ſeemeth to be cauſed by the over expence of the ſap, which being prevented, they will ſuperannuate, if they ſtand upon. Bacon.

Every tree muſt, to a true eſſe, be ſaid to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit proceeding from the coat that was ſuperinduced over the wood the laſt year. Ray.

A'NNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it ſufficient to ſignify a heart; becauſe the heart at one year weighs two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and, unto fifty years, annually encreaſeth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The whole ſtrength of a nation is the utmoſt that a prince can raiſe annually from his ſubjects. Swift.

ANNU'ITANT. n. f. [from annuity.] He that poſſeſſes or receives an annuity.

ANNUITY. n. f. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have aſſets by deſcent. The ſecond difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity againſt the granter, granter, his heirs, or ſucceſſors; but of a rent, the ſame actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for aſſets, becauſe it is no freehold in law; nor ſhall be put in execution upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the ſon of one earl, and brother to another, who ſupplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to aboliſh.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it: and whoever reſtrains this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light, the pure work of God, to mix extract,
And in her various objects of delight
Annull, which might in part my grief have eaſed. Milton.

A'NNULAR. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they ought not, in bending the arm or leg, ſide up, to be tied them to the bones in an annular figure. Grew.

A'NNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Becauſe a crooked reputation is neceſſary, the world gets leave to put on annulary privileges, that is, falſe notions, not agreeing with the truth. Ray.

A'NNULET. n. ſ. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of diſtinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3. Annulets are alſo a part of the coat-armour of ſeveral families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and juriſdiction, it being the cuſtom of prelates to receive their inveſtiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The ſmall ſquare members, in the Doriek capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

5. Annulet is alſo uſed for a narrow flat moulding common to other parts of the column; ſo called, becauſe it encompaſſes the column round. Chambers.

To ANNU'MERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to ſomething before mentioned.

ANNUMERA'TION. n. ſ. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

To ANNU'NCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate ſomething that has fallen out: a word not in popular uſe.

ANNUNCIA'TION DAY. n. ſ. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's ſalutation of the bleſſed Virgin; ſolemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour: and ſo upon all the feſtivals of the year. Taylor.

A'NODYNE. adj. [from a and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet dare ſhe not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping ſtill the nobler parts were ſound;
But ſtrove with anodynes t' aſſuage the ſmart,
And mildly thus her med'cine did impart. Dryd.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are ſuch things as relax the tenſion of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient ſubſtances; thoſe things which deſtroy the particular acrimony which occaſions the pain; or what deadens the ſenſation of the brain, by procuring ſleep. Arbuthnot.

To ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, enoindre, part, oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed here may be with deadly venom. Shakeſp.

Thou ſhalt have one ſees throughout all thy coaſt, but thou ſhalt not anoint thyſelf with the oil: for thine olive ſhall caſt his fruit. Deut. xxviii. 40.

2. To ſmear; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters then, in brazen caldrons boine,
Are pour'd to waſh his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the ſtiffened limbs anoint. Dryden.

3. To conſecrate by unction.

I will not ſee thy face
In his anointed fleſh ſtick boldly with fangs. Shakeſp.

ANO'INTER. n. ſ. [from anoint.] The perſon that anoints.

ANO'MALISM. n. ſ. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity; deviation from the common rule. Dict.

ANOMALI'STICAL. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in aſtronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth paſſeth through its orbit, diſtinct from the tropical year.

ANO'MALOUS. adj. [a priv. and ὁμαλὸς.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things. It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in aſtronomy, to the ſeemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will ariſe anomalous diſturbances not only in civil and artificial, but alſo in military officers. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

He being acquainted with ſome characters of every ſpeech, you may at pleaſure make him underſtand anomalous pronunciation. Holder.

Metals are gold, ſilver, copper, tin, lead, and iron: to which we may join that anomalous body, quickſilver or mercury. Locke.

ANO'MALOUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Eve was not ſolemnly begotten, but ſuddenly framed, and anomalouſly proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANO'MALY. n. ſ. [anomalie, Fr. anomalia, Lat. ἀνωμαλία.] Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we ſhould chance to find a mother debauching her daughter, is ſuch monſters have been ſeen, we muſt charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and hideouſneſs of nature. South.

I do not purſue the many pſeudographies in uſe, but intend to ſhew how moſt of theſe anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better ſupplied. Holder.

A'NOMY. n. ſ. [a priv. and νόμος.] Breach of law.

If ſin be good, and juſt, and lawful, it is no more evil, it is no ſin, no anomy.

Bp. Hall againſt H. Ibes.

ANO'N. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of ſpeaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Skinner from a and nean, or near; Mr. Shewſbew from on on.]

1. Quickly; ſoon; in a ſhort time.

A little ſhow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. Shakeſpeare.

Will they come abroad anon?
Shall we ſee young Oberon? Ben Jonſon.

However, witneſs, Heav'n!
Heav'n, witneſs thou anon! while we diſcharge
Freely our part. Milton.

He was not without deſign at that preſent, as ſhall be made out anon; meaning by that device to withdraw himſelf. Clarendon.

Still as I did the leaves inſpire,
With ſuch a purple light they ſhone,
As if they had been made of fire,

11. To bear proportion to.
Weapons must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person.
Swift.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.
Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and when this is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury.

13. To comply with.
He dies that touches of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered. Shakespeare.

14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.
Jason followed her counsel, whereto when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece.
Raleigh.
In operations upon bodies for their version or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not answer the trial in small: and so deceiveth many.
Bacon.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative summons; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be, perhaps, taken.
Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare.

16. To be over-against any thing.
Fire answers fire, and, by their pale beams,
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shak.

ANSWER. n. s. [from To answer.]

1. That which is said, whether in speech or writing, in return to a question, or position.
It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in wine than in your sight, wine is good.
Bacon.
How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready answer to the questions which he shall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the sick and imprisoned? Atterbury.

2. An account to be given to the demand of justice.
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it.
That you shall chuse your weapons. Shakespeare.

Anticipate our ſorrows? 'tis like thoſe
That die for fear of death. Denham.

4. To prevent any thing by crowding in before it; to preclude.

Time, that anticipates all dread exploits:
The ſlightly proviſion of a ſtoic took,
Unleſs the dead go with it. Shakſpeare.

I am far from preſuming to inſtruct the profeſſion, or anticipating their directions to ſuch as are under their government. Arbuthnot.

ANTICIPA'TION. n. ſ. [from anticipate.]

1. The act of taking up ſomething before its time.

The golden number gives the new moon four days too late, by reaſon of the anticipation, and our neglect of it. Holder.

It is not enough to be active when the time comes, unleſs we make ourſelves ſo by anticipation, and by ſtudy. L'Eſtrange.

2. Foretaſte.

If we really love and have the hope of future happineſs, we ſhall taſte it by way of anticipation and forethought; and in proportion as it will never be wanting often, and may there, with pleaſure, expect it. Hammond.

3. Opinion implanted before the reaſons of that opinion can be known.

The firſt and weſt, the ſtrength and life of the ſame anticipation concerning the firſt cauſe of things. South.

What nation is there, that, without any teaching, have not a kind of anticipation, or previous notion of a Deity? Derham.

A'NTICK. adj. [probably from antiquus, ancient, as things out of uſe appear old.] Odd; ridiculouſly wild, buffoon in geſticulation.

What! dare the ſlave
Come hither cover'd with an antick face,
And fleer and ſcorn at our ſolemnities? Shakeſpeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Of all our antick ſights, and pageantry,
Which Engliſh idlers run in croſſes to ſee. Dryd.

The poor wits to be out of countenance the while, that could go through his tune with ſo long hang, though provoked by the antick geſtures of merry Andrew, who was to play tricks. Addiſon.

A'NTICK. n. ſ.

1. He that plays antics; he that uſes odd geſticulation; a buffoon.

Within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court; and there the antick ſits,
Scoffing his ſtate. Shakeſpeare.

If you ſhould ſmile he grows impatient.—
Fear not, my Lord, we can contain ourſelves,
Were he the veriеſt antick in the world. Shakeſp.

2. Odd appearance.

A work of rich entail, and curious mold,
Woven with anticks, and wild imagery. Fairy Q.

For e'en at firſt reflection ſhe eſpies
Such toys, ſuch antickſ, and ſuch vanities,
As ſhe retires and ſhrinks for ſhame and fear. Davies.

To A'NTICK. v. a. [from antick.] To make antick.

Mine own tongue
Splits what it ſpeaks; the wild diſguiſe hath almoſt
Anticked us all. Shakeſpeare.

A'NTICKLY.

A'NTICKLY, adv. [from antick.] In an antick manner; with odd poſtures; wild geſticulations, or fanciful appearance.

Scrambling, out-facing, faſhion-mongring boys,
That lye, and cog, and flout, deprave, and ſlander,
Go antickly, and ſhew an outward hideouſneſs,
And ſpeak of half a dozen dangerous words.
Shakeſpeare.

ANTICLIMAX. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ and κλῖμαξ.] A ſentence in which the laſt part expreſſes ſomething lower than the firſt.

A certain figure, which was unknown to the ancients, is called by ſome an anticlimax. Addiſon.

This diſtich is frequently mentioned as an example:

Next comes Dalhouſſey, the great god of war,
Lieutenant colonel to the earl of Mar.

ANTICONVU'LSIVE. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and convulſive.] Good againſt convulſions.

Whatſoever produces an inflammatory diſpoſition in the blood, produces the aſthma, an anticonvulſive medicine. Fryer.

ANTICOR. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and cor, the heart.]

A preternatural ſwelling of a round figure, occaſioned by a ſanguine and odious humour, and appearing in a little breaſt, oppoſite to the heart. An anticor may kill a horſe, unleſs it be brought to a ſuppuration by good remedies. Farrier's Dict.

ANTICO'URTIER. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and courtier.] One that oppoſes the court.

ANTIDOTAL. adj. [from antidote.] That which has the quality of an antidote, or the power of counteracting poiſon.

The ſovereign antidotal way, which medicine may Bacon.

Words that can innocently oppoſe the poiſon, become antidotal to the poiſoned. Bentley's Phil. Exerc.

A'NTIDOTE. n. ſ. [ἀντίδοτος, antidotus, Lat. a thing given in oppoſition to ſomething elſe.]

A medicine which forced the inwards of another, as antidote doth. Spenſer.

That not the poiſon,
His antidote can help him, and he flies
Moſt when no cauſe. Sir J. Denham.

What could we have that antidote invented by Providence againſt the dangers to which we are expoſed in the ſtate, which one's face cannot be? Bentley's Vulgar Errors.

Poiſon will work leaſt where the danger lies,
Unleſs we meet the antidote to prepare. Dryden jun.

ANTIDYSENTE'RICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and dyſenteria, a bloody flux.] Good againſt the bloody flux.

ANTIMONA'RCHICAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and μοναρχία, government by a ſingle perſon.] Againſt government by a ſingle perſon.

When he ſpied the ſtatue of King Charles in the middle of the crowd, and moſt of the kings ranged over their heads, he concluded that an antimonarchical aſſembly could never chooſe ſuch a place. Addiſon.

ANTIMONA'RCHICALNESS. n. ſ. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

ANTIMO'NIAL. adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.

Though antimonial cups, prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages ſhould impart,
This diſſipation, this profuſe expence,
Nor ſhrinks then ſize, nor waſtes their flores immenſe. Blackmore.

A'NTIMONY. n. ſ. [The ſtibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called στίμμι. The reaſon of its modern denomination is referred to Baſil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown ſome of it to the hogs, obſerved that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore he imagined his fellow monks would be the better for a like doſe. The experiment, however, ſucceeded ſo ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine, antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral ſubſtance, of a metalline nature, having all the leading characters of a real metal, except malleability, and may be called a ſemimetal, being a ſoſſile glebe of ſome undetermined metal, combined with a ſulphurous and fiery ſubſtance. Mines of all metals afford it; that in gold mines is reckoned beſt. It has alſo its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. Its texture is full of little ſhining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glaſs. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are interwoven, which are called male antimony, that without them being denominated female antimony. It melts in the fire, though not ſo eaſily; and diſſolves more eaſily in water. It deſtroys and diſſipates all metals mixed with it, except gold; and is therefore uſeful in refining. It is a common ingredient in medicines, or forming cathartics, leaving to give them a more potent. It makes a part in bell metal, and renders the ſound more clear. It is much uſed within, to make it more hard, white, and ſonorous; and with lead, in the caſting of printers letters, to render them more ſmooth and firm. It is uſed in the melting of metals, and eſpecially in caſting of cannon-balls. In pharmacy it is uſed under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. Chambers.

ANTINEPHRI'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and νεφρίτις.] Medicines good againſt diſeaſes of the reins and kidneys.

A'NTINOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the ſame law.

Antinomies are almoſt unavoidable in ſuch variety of opinion and anſwers. Baker.

ANTIPARALY'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and παραλυτικὸς.] Efficacious againſt the palſy.

ANTIPATHE'TICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The ſoil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures. Howel's Vocal Forreſt.

ANTIPATHE'TICALNESS. n. ſ. [from antipathetical.] The quality or ſtate of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTI'PATHY. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and πάθος, feeling: antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, ſo as to ſhun it involuntarily; averſion; diſlike. It is oppoſed to ſympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and ſuch a knave. Shakeſpeare.

To this perhaps might be juſtly attributed moſt of the ſympathies and antipathies obſervable in men. Locke.

2. It has ſometimes the particle againſt before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy againſt ſtanding armies in times of peace; becauſe I took armies to be hired by the maſter of the family, to keep his children in ſlavery. Swift.

3. Sometimes to.

Aſk you, what provocation I have had?
The ſtrong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and ſhould be yours. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more denſe, they will draw, condenſe, and, in effect, incorporate. Bacon.

ANTIPERISTASIS. n. ſ. [from ἀντιπερίστασις, formed of ἀντὶ and περιϊσταμαι, to ſtand round.] The oppoſition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it oppoſes becomes heightened or intended, or the action by which a body, attacked by another, collects itſelf, and becomes ſtronger by ſuch oppoſition; or an intention of the activity of one quality cauſed by the oppoſition of another. Thus quicklime is ſet on fire by the affuſion of cold water; ſo water becomes warmer in winter than in ſummer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperiſtaſis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetick philoſophy.

The antiperiſtaſis of age
More inflames his ambitious rage. Cowley.

The riotous prodigal deteſts covetouſneſs, yet let him find the ſprings grow dry which feed his luxury, covetouſneſs ſhall be called in: and ſo, by a ſtrange antiperiſtaſis, prodigality ſhall neglect rapine. Decay of Piety.

ANTIPESTILE'NTIAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and peſtilential.] Efficacious againſt the infection of the plague.

Portugueſe conceit the air better is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipeſtilential ungents, to anoint the noſtrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTIPHRASIS. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and φράσις, a form of ſpeech.] The uſe of words in a ſenſe oppoſite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cauſe to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high courts of juſtice, ſo called only by antiphraſis. South.

ANTI'PODAL. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodal unto the Indians. Brown.

ANTIPODES. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and πόδες, feet.] Thoſe people who, living on the other ſide of the globe, have their feet directly oppoſite to ours.

We ſhould hold day with the antipodes,
If you would walk in abſence of the ſun.
Shakeſpeare.

So ſhines the ſun, tho' hence remov'd, as clear
When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here.
Waller.

ANTIPOPE. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and pope.] He that uſurps the popedom, in oppoſition to the right pope.

This houſe is famous in hiſtory, for the retreat of an antipope, who called himſelf Felix V. Addiſon.

ANTIPTO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀντίπτωσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one caſe is put for another.

A'NTIQUARY. n. ſ. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man ſtudious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the reliefts or an intellect defaced with ſin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the ſtamp it once bore. South.

With ſharpen'd ſight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inſcription value, but the ruſt adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is ſtill very intelligible; had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be underſtood, unleſs by antiquaries. Swift.

A'NTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Neſtor,
Inſtructed by the antiquary times;
He muſt, he is, he cannot but be wiſe. Shakeſp.

To A'NTIQUATE. v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] To put out of uſe; to make obſolete.

The growth of Chriſtianity in this kingdom might reaſonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate ſome old ones, that ſeemed leſs conſiſtent with the Chriſtian doctrines.
Hale's Common Law of England.

Miſton's Paradiſe Loſt is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the ſtrength of his expreſſion, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harſhneſs of their ſound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,
Shall like an antiquated fable ſound. Addiſon.

A'NTIQUATEDNESS. n. ſ. [from antiquated.] The ſtate of being antiquated, worn out of uſe, or obſolete.

ANTI'QUE. adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat. It was formerly pronounced according to the Engliſh analogy, with the accent on the firſt ſyllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the laſt, at leaſt in proſe; the poets uſe it variouſly.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Ceſario, but that piece of ſong,
That old and antique ſong we heard laſt night.
Shakeſpeare.

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know.
In ſuch a ſtyle as courts this boaſt of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The ſeals which we have remaining of Julius Cæſar, which we know to be antique, have the ſtar of Venus over them. Dryden.

My copper lamps, at any rate,
For being true antique I bought it,
Yet wiſely melted down my plate,
On modern moulds to be wrought it;
And trifles I ankle purſue,
Becauſe they're old, becauſe they're new. Prior.

3. Of old faſhion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And fad habiliments right well beſeen. Fairy Queen.

Muſt he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor ſparkling thoughts in antique words convey?
Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not theſe living death-heads unto me,
For theſe not ancient but antique be. Donne.

And ſooner may a gulling weather-ſpy,
By drawing forth heav'n's ſcheme, tell certainly
What faſhion'd hats, or ruffs, or ſuits, next year
Our giddy-headed antique you'th will wear. Donne.

ANTI'QUE. n. ſ. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my ſeal of Julius Cæſar; as alſo another ſeal, ſuppoſed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and ſet in gold. Swift.

ANTI'QUENESS. n. ſ. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may diſcover ſomething venerable in the antiqueneſs of the work; but we would ſee the deſign enlarged. Addiſon.

ANTI'QUITY. n. ſ. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time paſt long ago.

I mention Ariſtotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greateſt philoſopher, the moſt impartial hiſtorian, and the moſt conſummate ſtateſman, of all antiquity. Addiſon.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That ſuch pillars were raiſed by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Raleigh.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the obſervation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguiſh all heathen antiquities; I do not find that thoſe zeals laſt long; as it appeared in the ſucceſſion of Sabinian, who did reſtore the former antiquities. Bacon.

4. Old age: a ludicrous ſenſe.

Is not your voice broken? your wind ſhort? your chin double? your wit ſingle? and every part about you blaſted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourſelf young? Shakeſpeare.

5. Ancientneſs; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTISCII. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [from ἀντὶ and σκιὰ.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different ſides of the equator, who conſequently at noon have their ſhadows projected oppoſite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antiſcii to thoſe of the ſouth; the one projecting their ſhadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the ſouth pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBU'TICAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and ſcorbutum, the ſcurvy.] Good againſt the ſcurvy.

The warm antiſcorbutical plants, in quantities, will occaſion ſtinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot.

ANTISCORBU'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ, againſt, and ſcorbutum, the ſcurvy.] Good againſt the ſcurvy,

The warm antiſcorbutick nouriſhes, animal diet, and animal ſalts, are to be. Arbuthnot.

Antiſplenetick open the obſtructions of the ſpleen. Floyer.

ANTISTROPHE. n. ſ. [ἀντιστροφὴ, from ἀντὶ, the contrary way, and στροφὴ, turning.] In an ode ſuppoſed to be ſung in parts, the ſecond ſtanza of every three, or ſometimes every ſecond ſtanza; ſo called because the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ, and ſtruma, a ſcrophulous ſwelling.] Good againſt the king's evil.

I preſcribed him a diſtilled milk, with antiſtrumaticks, and purged him. Wiſeman.

ANTITHESIS. n. ſ. in the plural antitheſes. [ἀντίθεσις, placing in oppoſition.] Oppoſition of words or ſentiments; contraſt; as in theſe lines:

Though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage; without o'erflowing, full.
Denham.

I ſee a chief, who leads my choſen ſons,
All arm'd with points, antitheſes, and puns. Pope.

A'NTITYPE. n. ſ. [ἀντίτυπος.] That which is reſembled or ſhadowed out by the type; that of which the type is the repreſentation. It is a term of theology. See TYPE.

When once upon the wing, he ſoars to an higher pitch, from the type to the antitype, to the days of the Meſſiah, the aſcenſion of our Saviour, and, at length, to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Burnet's Theory.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the prieſt of the moſt high God, miniſtring the antitype, or the ſubſtance, Chriſt himſelf. Taylor.

ANTITY'PICAL. adj. [from antitype.] That which relates to an antitype; that which explains the type.

ANTIVENE'REAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ and venereal.] Good againſt the venereal diſeaſe.

If the bark be joined with it, you will ſcarce cure your patient without exhibiting antivenereal remedies. Wiſeman.

A'NTLER. n. ſ. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the firſt branches of a ſtag's horns; but, popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow leſs branches, and firſt loſe their brow antlers, or loweſt furcations next to the head. Brown.

A well-grown ſtag, whoſe antlers rife
High o'er his front, his beams invade the ſkies.
Dryden.

Bright Diana
Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching antlers
Of ſtags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTO'ECI. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [Lat. from ἀντὶ, and οἰκέω, to inhabit.] In geography, thoſe inhabitants of the earth who live under the ſame meridian, and at the ſame diſtance from the equator; the one toward the north, and the other to the ſouth. Hence they have the ſame longitude, and their latitude is alſo the ſame, but of a different denomination. They are in the ſame ſemicircle of the meridian, but oppoſite parallels. They have preciſely the ſame hours of the day and night, but oppoſite ſeaſons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

ANTONOMA'SIA. n. ſ. [from ἀντὶ, and ὄνομα, a name.] A form of ſpeech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of ſome dignity, office, profeſſion, ſcience, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majeſty; a nobleman, his lordſhip. We ſay the philoſopher inſtead of Ariſtotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a wiſe man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

AN'TRE. n. ſ. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den: not in uſe.

With all my travels hiſtory:
Wherein of antres vaſt, and deſarts wild,
It was my hent to ſpeak. Shakeſpeare.

A'NVIL. n. ſ. [ænpille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the ſmith lays his metal to be forged.

I ſaw a ſmith ſtand with his hammer, thus,
The whilſt his iron did on his anvil cool. Shakeſp.
On their eternal anvils here he found
The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my ſword, and do conteſt
Hotly and nobly. Shakeſpeare.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a ſtate of formation or preparation.

Several members of our houſe knowing what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and deſired their judgment. Swift.

ANXIE'TY. n. ſ. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about ſome future event; ſuſpenſe with uneaſineſs; perplexity; ſolicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pain and diſeaſes of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of ſpirit, not only to enjoy the pleaſures of life, but peace of conſcience, and tranquillity of mind. Tillotſon.

2. In the medical language, lowneſs of ſpirits, with uneaſineſs of the ſtomach.

In anxieties with which extend fevers, when the cold ſtir hovers, a warm regimen may be allowed, and becauſe anxiety often happens by ſpaſms from wind, ſtrong antiſpaſmodicks. Arbuthnot.

A'NXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Diſturbed about ſome uncertain event; ſolicitous; being in painful ſuſpenſe; painfully uncertain.

He ſat with cheek upon his hand reclining,
And various thoughts revolving in his mind. Dryd.
With beating hearts the due event they wait,
Anxious, and trembling for the fate of ſtate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

Leſs ſhall I be one unhappy mortals by;
But with the mighty blaſt I fugitive,
Diſcomfited to darkneſs, anxious labour come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

In writings we need to be ſolicitous about the meaning only, but thoſe that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey; we may be leſs anxious about the ſenſe of other authors. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but ſometimes of; leſs properly.

Anxious only neglect, luſtre ſtring, change. Granville.

A'NXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; ſolicitouſly; unquietly; carefully; with painful uncertainty.

But where the loſs is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us to anxiouſly to prevent it, ſince it might be repaired again. South.
Then what befits the new lord mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Are anxiouſly inquiſitive to know. Dryden.

A'NXIOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from anxious.] The quality of being anxious; ſuſceptibility of anxiety.

A'NY. adj. [anig, enig, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its ſenſes, applied indifferently to perſons or things.

I know you are now, Sir, a gentleman born—
Ay, and have been ſo any time theſe four hours. Shakeſpeare.

You contented yourſelf with being capable, as much as any whoſoever, of defending your country with your ſword. Dryden.
How fit is this retreat for uninterrupted ſtudy! Any one that ſees it will own, I could not have choſen a more likely place to converſe with the dead in. Pope.

2. Whoſoever; whatſoever; as diſtinguiſhed from ſome other.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of theſe princely ſuitors that are already come? Shakeſpeare.
An inverted motion being begun any where below, continues itſelf all the whole length. Locke.

3. It is uſed in oppoſition to none.

I wound and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Deut. xxxii. 39.

A'ORIST. n. ſ. [ἀόριστος.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

AO'RTA. n. ſ. [ἀορτή.] The great artery which riſes immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart. Quincy.

APA'CE. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; ſpeedily: uſed of things in motion.

Or when the flying libbard ſhe did chace,
She could then nimbly move, and after fly apace.
Spenſer.
Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ſter,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace.
And ſince, methinks, I would not grow ſo faſt,
Becauſe ſweet flow'rs are ſlow, and weeds make haſte. Shakeſpeare.
He promiſ'd in his eaſt a glorious race;
Now ſtark from his meridian, ſinks apace. Dryd.
Is not his imprudence, who, ſeeing the tide making haſte towards him apace, will ſtop till the ſea overwhelm him? Swift.

2. With haſte; applied to ſome action.

The baron now his ſtubborn ſteps apace
Th' embroil'd king, who ſhow'd but half his face,
And his refulgent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Haſtily; with ſpeed: ſpoken of any kind of progreſſion from one ſtate to another.

This ſecond ſource of men,
While one man's overthrow doth profit many,
Shall "bead their laws, and multiply apace. Milton.
The life and power of religion decays apace here and at home, while we are ſtraining the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury.
If ſenſible pleaſure, or real grandeur, be our ends, we ſhall proceed apace to real misery. Watts.

APAGO'GICAL. adj. [from ἀπαγωγὴ, compounded of ἀπὸ, from, and ἄγω, to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonſtration is ſuch as does not prove the thing directly; but ſhews the impoſſibility, or abſurdity, which ariſes from denying it; and is alſo called reductio ad impoſſibile, or ad abſurdum. Chambers.

APA'RT. adv. [apart, Fr.]

APLU'STRE. n. ſ. [Latin.] The ancient enſign carried in ſea veſſels.

The one holds a ſword in her hand, to repreſent the Iliad; as the other has an aplueſtre, to repreſent the Odyſſey, or voyage of Ulyſſes. Addiſon.

APO'CALYPSE. n. ſ. [from ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; diſcovery: a word uſed only of the ſacred writings.

O for that warning voice, which he who ſaw
Th' apocalypſe heard cry in heav'n aloud. Milton.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as ſeen in the apocalypſe. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICAL. adj. [from apocalypſe.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could underſtand that ſcene, at the opening of this apocalyptical theatre, we ſhould find it a repreſentation of the majeſty of our Saviour. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICALLY. adv. [from apocalyptical.] In ſuch a manner as to reveal ſomething ſecret.

APO'COPE. n. ſ. [ἀποκοπὴ.] A figure in grammar, when the laſt letter or ſyllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni, for ingenii; apoplex, for apoplexy.

APOCRU'STICK. adj. [ἀποκρύπτικα, from ἀποκρεω, to drive.] Remedies endued with a repelling and aſtringent power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours. Chambers.

APO'CRYPHA. n. ſ. [from ἀποκρύπτω, to put out of ſight.] Books not publickly communicated; books whoſe authors are not known. It is uſed for the books appended to the ſacred writings, which, being of doubtful authors, are leſs regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for ſacred, as we do the holy ſcripture, but for human compoſitions. Hooker.

APO'CRYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom, who ſaith that all writings not canonical are apocryphal, uſes not the title apocryphal as the reſt of the fathers ordinarily have done, whoſe cuſtom is ſo to name, for the moſt part, only ſuch as might not publickly be read or divulged. Hooker.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To ſpeak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wiſdom is glorious, and never fadeth away. Addiſon.

3. It is ſometimes uſed for an account of uncertain credit.

APO'CRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indiſputably.

APO'CRYPHALNESS. n. ſ. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulneſs of credit.

APODI'CTICAL. adj. [from ἀπόδειξις, evident truth; demonſtration.] Demonſtrative; evident beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an aſſured knowledge of it; verily, to perſuade their apprehenſions otherwiſe, were to make an Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

We can ſay all at the number three; therefore the world is perfect. Tobit went, and his dog followed him; therefore there is a world in the moon, were an argument as apodictical. Glanville.

APODI'XIS. n. ſ. [ἀποδείξις.] Demonſtration. Dict.

APOGÆ'ON. } n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ, from, and
A'POGEE. } γῆ, the earth.] A point
APOGE'UM. } in the heavens, in which the ſun, or a planet, is at the greateſt diſtance poſſible from the earth in its whole revolution. The ancient aſtronomers regarding the earth as the centre of the ſyſtem, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon, which the moderns, making the ſun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chambers.

Thy ſun is in his apogæon placed,
And when it moveth next, muſt needs deſcend.
Fairfax.

It is yet not agreed in what time, preciſely, the apogæum abſolveth one degree.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APOLOGE'TICAL. } adj. [from ἀπολογέω, to
APOLOGE'TICK. } defend.] That which is ſaid in defence of any thing or perſon.

I deſign to publiſh an eſſay, the greater part of which is apologetical, for one ſort of chymiſts. Boyle.

APOLOGI'TICALLY. adv. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuſe.

APO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [from To apologize.] He that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

To APO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any perſon or thing.

It will be much more ſeaſonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports thoſe, who dwell ſecure, to look about them.
Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for before the ſubject of apology.

I ought to apologize for my indiſcretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Preparation for Death.

The tranſlator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood.
Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. ſ. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; ſtory contrived to teach ſome moral truth.

An apologue of Æſop is beyond a ſyllogiſm, and proverbs more powerful than demonſtration.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Some men are remarked for pleaſantneſs in raillery; others for apologues and appoſite diverting ſtories. Locke.

APO'LOGY. n. ſ. [apologia, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuſe. Apology generally ſignifies rather excuſe than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, ſometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuſe
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which with bland words at will ſhe thus addreſs'd.
Milton.

2. It has for before the object of excuſe.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: ſome will think it needs no excuſe, and others will receive none. Dryden.

I ſhall neither trouble the reader, nor myſelf, with any apology for publiſhing of theſe ſermons; for if they be, in any meaſure, truly ſerviceable to the end for which they are deſigned, I do not ſee what apology is neceſſary; and if they be not ſo, I am ſure none can be ſufficient. Tillotſon.

APOMECO'METRY. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ, from, μῆκος, diſtance, and μέτρον, to meaſure.] The art of meaſuring things at a diſtance. Dict.

APONEURO'SIS. n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ, from, and νεῦρον, a nerve.] An expanſion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyſt riſes near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeuroſis that runs over the veſſel, which becomes exceſſively expanded.
Sharp's Surgery.

APO'PHASIS. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀποφασις, a denying.] A figure in rhetorick, by which the orator, ſpeaking ironically, ſeems to wave what he would plainly inſinuate; as, Neither will I mention thoſe things, which if I ſhould, you notwithſtanding could neither confute or ſpeak againſt them.
Smith's Rhetorick.

APOPHLE'GMATICK. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLE'GMATISM. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine of which the intention is to draw phlegm from the blood.

And ſo it is in apophlegmatiſms and gargariſms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

APOPHLEGMA'TIZANT. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy which cauſes an evacuation of ſerous or mucous humour by the noſtrils, as particular kinds of ſternutatories. Quincy.

A'POPHTHEGM. n. ſ. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable ſaying; a valuable maxim uttered on ſome ſudden occaſion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wiſdom, whereof many are to be ſeen in Laertius and Lyciſthenes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

I had a mind to collect and digeſt ſuch obſervations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great aſſertion, All is vanity. Prior.

APO'PHYGE. n. ſ. [ἀποφυγὴ, flight, or eſcape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to ſpring out of its baſe; and was originally no more than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from ſplitting, and were afterwards imitated in ſtone work. We ſometimes call it the ſpring of the column. Chambers.

APO'PHYSIS. n. ſ. [ἀπόφυσις.] The prominent parts of ſome bones; the ſame as proceſs. It differs from an epiphyſis, as it is a continuance of the bone itſelf; whereas the latter is ſomewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part. Quincy.

It is the apophyſis, or head, of the os tibiæ, which makes the knee. Wiſeman's Surgery.

APOPLE'CTICAL. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the ſame complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive ſeems abolliſhed; as may be obſerved in ſupporting perſons inebriated, apoplectical, or in lipothymies and ſwoonings. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In an apoplectical caſe, he found extravaſated blood making way from the ventricles of the brain. Derham.

APOPLE'CTICK. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was ſeized with an apoplectick fit, which afterward terminated in ſome kind of lethargy. Wiſeman.

A'POPLEX. n. ſ. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The laſt ſyllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Preſent puniſhment purſues his maw,
When ſurfeited and ſwell'd, the peacock raw
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, inteſtate death. Dryden.

A'POPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with an apoplexy.

Senſe, ſure, you have,
Elſe could you not have motion: but ſure that ſenſe
Is apoplex'd. Shakeſpeare.

A'POPLEXY. n. ſ. [ἀπόπληξις.] A ſudden deprivation of all internal and external ſenſation, and of all motion, unleſs of the heart and thorax. The cauſe is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with ſtimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, mulled, deaf, ſleepy, inſenſible. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reaſon, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither ſenſe nor underſtanding. Locke.

APO'RIA. n. ſ. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſpeaker ſhews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to ſay in ſome ſtrange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the caſe with himſelf. Thus Cicero ſays, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more laſciviouſly, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more preſumptuouſly, I cannot well declare.
Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHO'EA, n. ſ. [ἀπορροή.] Effluvium; emanation; ſomething emitted by another: not in uſe.

The reaſon of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhœas, which paſſing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the ſalve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Scepſis.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ, after, and σιωπάω, to be ſilent.] A form of ſpeech, by which the ſpeaker, through ſome affection, as ſorrow, baſhfulneſs, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his ſpeech before it be all ended. A figure, when, ſpeaking of a thing, we yet ſeem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the courſe of the ſentence begun is ſo ſtayed, as thereby ſome part of the ſentence, not being uttered, may be underſtood.
Smith's Rhetorick.

APO'STASY. n. ſ. [ἀπόστασις.] Departure from what a man has profeſſed: it is generally applied to religion; ſometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apoſtaſy to be a wilful departure from that ſtate of faith, which any perſon has profeſſed himſelf to hold in the chriſtian church.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware
Apoſtaſy, by what befel in heav'n
To thoſe apoſtates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedneſs, but apoſtaſy, degenerate wickedneſs. Sprat.

Whoever do give different worſhips, muſt bring in more gods; which is an apoſtaſy from one God.
Stillingfleet.

APO'STATE. n. ſ. [apoſtata, Lat. ἀποστάτης.] One that has forſaken his profeſſion; generally applied to one that has left his religion.

The angels, for diſobedience, thou haſt reſerved to a miſerable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apoſtate from thee and goodneſs, thou haſt given a Saviour. Rogers's Sermons.

Apoſtates in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, ſubject unto all puniſhments and cenſures againſt heretick. Ayliffe.

APOSTA'TICAL. adj. [from apoſtate.] After the manner of an apoſtate.

To wear turbants is an apoſtatical conformity. Sandys.

To APO'STATIZE. v. n. [from apoſtate.] To forſake one's profeſſion: it is commonly uſed of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith, becauſe they muſt not look upon a woman that hath an huſband, but becauſe they are reſolved from the perpetration of their luſts. If wanton gayety and lightneſs of thoughts, had been corrected by the goſpel, they would have apoſtatized nevertheleſs. Taylor.

To APO'STEMATE. v. n. [from apoſteme.] To become an apoſteme; to ſwell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abſceſſes of the breaſt and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening too ſoon, they ſometime apoſtemate again, and become crude. Wiſeman.

APOSTEMA'TION. n. ſ. [from apoſtemate.] The formation of an apoſteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing, or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apoſtemations, ſalivations, &c. Greww.

A'POSTEME. } n. ſ. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow
A'POSTUME. } ſwelling, filled with purulent matter; an abſceſs.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apoſtemes of the brain, do happen only in the left ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The opening of apoſtemes, before the ſuppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude. Wiſeman.

APO'STLE. n. ſ. [apoſtolus, Lat. ἀποστολος.] A perſon ſent with mandates by another. It is particularly applied to them whom our Saviour deputed to preach the goſpel.

But all his mind is bent to holineſs;
His champions are the prophets and apoſtles.
Shakeſpeare.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be to erect myſelf into an apoſtle: a preſumption in any one that cannot confirm what he ſays by miracles. Locke.

We know but a ſmall part of the notion of an apoſtle, by knowing barely that he is ſent forth. Watts's Logick.

APO'STLESHIP. n. ſ. [from apoſtle.] The office or dignity of an apoſtle.

Where, becauſe faith is in too low degree,
I thought it ſome apoſtleſhip in me
To ſpeak things, which by faith alone I ſee. Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epiſtles; which are all confined within the buſineſs of his apoſtleſhip, and ſo contain nothing but points of Chriſtian inſtruction. Locke.

APOSTO'LICAL. adj. [from apoſtolick.] Delivered or taught by the apoſtles; belonging to the apoſtles.

They acknowledge not, that the church keeps any thing as apoſtolical, which is not found in the apoſtles writings, in what other records ſoever it be found. Hooker.

Declare yourſelf for that church which is founded upon ſcripture, reaſon, apoſtolical practice, and antiquity. Hooker.

APOSTO'LICALLY. adv. [from apoſtolical.] In the manner of the apoſtles.

APOSTO[illegible]. n. ſ. [from apoſtoli-

cal.] The quality of relating to the apoſtles; apoſtolical authority.

APOSTO'LICK. adj. [from apoſtle. The accent is placed by Dryden on the antepenult.] Taught by the apoſtles; belonging to an apoſtle.

Their oppoſitions in maintenance of publick ſuperſtition againſt apoſtick endeavours, were vain and frivolous. Hooker.

On whom did Lecture tradition ſtrike,
Provided that it were apoſtolick? Dryden.

APO'STROPHE. n. ſ. [ἀποστροφὴ, from ἀπὸ, from, and στρέφω, to turn.]

1. In rhetorick, a diverſion of ſpeech to another perſon than the ſpeech appointed did intend or require; or, it is a turning of the ſpeech from one perſon to another, many times abruptly. A figure when we break off the courſe of our ſpeech, and ſpeak to ſome new perſon, preſent or abſent, as to the people or witneſſes, when it was before directed to the judges or opponent. Smith's Rhetorick.

2. In grammar, the contraction of a word by the uſe of a comma, as, tho', for though; rep' for reputation.

To APPROPI'NQUE. v. n. [appropinquo, Lat.] To approach; to draw near to. A ludicrous word.

The clotted blood within my hose,

That from my wounded body flows,

With mortal crisis doth portend

My days to appropinque an end. Hudibras.

APPRO'PRIABLE. adj. [from appropriate.] That which may be appropriated; that which may be restrained to something particular.

This conceit, applied unto the original of man, and the beginning of the world, is more justly appropriable unto its end. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To APPRO'PRIATE. v. a. [approprier, Fr. appropio, low Lat.]

1. To contign to some particular use or person.

Things sanctified were thereby in such sort appropriated unto God, as that they might never afterwards again be made common. Hooker.

As for this spot of ground, this person, this thing, I have selected and appropriated, I have inclosed it to myself and my own use; and I will endure no sharer, no rival, or companion in it. South.

Some they appropriated to the gods,

And some to publick, some to private ends. Roscommon.

Marks of honour are appropriated to the magistrate, that he might be invited to reverence himself. Atterbury.

2. To claim or exercise; to take to himself by an exclusive right.

To themselves appropriating

The spirit of God, promis'd alike and giv'n

To all believers. Milton.

Why should people engross and appropriate the common benefits of fire, air, and water, to themselves? L'Estrange.

Every body else has an equal title to it; and therefore he cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow commoners, all mankind. Locke.

3. To make peculiar to something; to annex by combination.

He need but be furnished with verses of sacred scripture; and his system, that has appropriated them to the orthodoxy of his church, makes them immediately unanswerable arguments. Locke.

We, by degrees, get ideas and names, and learn their appropriated connection one with another. Locke.

4. In law, to alienate a benefice. See APPROPRIATION.

Before Richard II. it was lawful to appropriate the whole fruits of a benefice to any abbey, the house finding one to serve the cure; that king rectified that horrid evil. Ayliffe.

APPRO'PRIATE. adj. [from the verb.] Peculiar; consigned to some particular use or person; belonging peculiarly.

He did institute a band of fifty archers, by the name of yeomen of his guard; and that it might be thought to be rather a matter of dignity, than any matter of diffidence appropriate to his own safe, he made an ordinance not temporary, but to hold in succession for ever. Bacon.

The heathens themselves had an apprehension of the necessity of some appropriate acts of divine worship. Stilling fleet.

APPROPRIA'TION. n. f. [from appropriate.]

Should she seem

Soft'ning the least appearance to bestow,

Their colours burnish, and, by hope inspir'd,

They brisk advance. Thomson.

To APPRO'VE. v. a. [approuver, Fr. approbo, Lat.]

1. To like; to be pleased with.

There can be nothing possibly evil which God approveth, and that he approveth much more than he doth command. Hooker.

What power was that, whereby Medea saw,

And will approv'd, and prais'd the better course,

When her rebellious sense did so withdraw

Her feeble pow'rs, that she pursu'd the worse? Daniel.

2. To express liking.

It is looked upon as an offence for a man to set up his own opinion against that of some learned doctor, or otherwise approved writer. Locke.

3. To prove; to shew; to justify.

His meaning was not, that darkness could simply in nothing be deceived, but that it had in such sort approved his skill, that he seemed worthy of credit for ever after, in matters appertaining to the science he was skilful in. Hooker.

In religion,

What damned error, but some sober brow

Will bless it, and approve it with a text? Shakesp.

I'm sorry

That he approves the common liar, Fame,

Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare.

Would'st thou approve thy constancy? Approve

First thy obedience. Milton.

Refer all the actions of this short life to that state which will never end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at the last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

Soon as they forth were come to open ſight
Of day-ſpring, and the ſun. Milton.

A'RBOUR. n. ſ. [from arbor, a tree.] A bower; a place covered with green branches of trees.

Nay, you ſhall ſee mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a laſt year's pippin of my own graffing. Shakeſpeare.

Let us divide our labours: thou, where choice
Leads thee, or where moſt needs, whether to wind
The woodbine round this arbour, or direct
The claſping ivy where to climb. Milton.

For noon-day's heat are cloſer arbours made,
And for freſh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryden.

ARBOUR VINE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of bind-weed; which ſee.

A'RBUSCLE. n. ſ. [arbuſcula, Lat.] Any little ſhrub. Dict.

A'RBUTE. n. ſ. [arbutus, Lat.]

Arbute, or ſtrawberry-tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult to be raiſed from the ſeeds, but may be propagated by layers. It grows to a goodly tree, endures our climate, unleſs the weather be very ſevere, and makes beautiful hedges. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

Rough arbute ſlips into a hazel bough
Are oft ingrafted; and good apples grow
Out of a plain tree ſtock. May's Virgil.

ARC. n. ſ. [arcus, Lat.]

1. A ſegment; a part of a circle; not more than a ſemicircle.

Their ſegments, or arcs, for the moſt part, exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton's Opticks.

2. An arch.

Load ſome vain church with old theatrick ſtate,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden-gate. Pope.

The nations of the field and wood
Build on the wave, or arch beneath the ſand. Pope.

2. To cover with arches.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd ſo high, that giants may get through.
Shakeſpeare.

The proud river which makes her bed at her feet, is arched over with ſuch a curious pile of ſtones, that conſidering the rapid courſe of the deep ſtream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world. Howel.

3. To form into arches.

Fine devices of arching water without ſpilling, and making it riſe in ſeveral forms of feathers and drinking-glaſſes, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and ſweetneſs. Bacon.

ARCH. adj. [from ἄρχω, chief.]

1. Chief; of the firſt claſs.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The moſt arch deed of pitcous maſſacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakeſp.

There is ſprung up
An heretick, an arch one, Cranmer. Shakeſp.

2. Waggiſh; mirthful; triflingly miſchievous. This ſignification it ſeems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy moſt remarkable for his pranks; as, the arch rogue; unleſs it be derived from Archy, the name of the jeſter to Charles I.

Eugenio ſet out from the univerſity; he had the reputation of an arch lad at ſchool. Swift.

ARCH, in compoſition, ſignifies chief, or of the firſt claſs [from ἄρχω, or ἀρχὴ.]; as, archangel, archbiſhop. It is pronounced variouſly with regard to the ch, which before a conſonant ſound as in cheeſe, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. ſ. [archangelus, Lat.] One of the higheſt order of angels.

His form had yet not loſt
All its original brightneſs, nor appear'd
Leſs than archangel ruin'd, and the exceſs
Of glory obſcur'd. Milton.

'Tis ſure th' archangel's trump I hear,
Nature's great paſſing-bell, the only call
Of God's that will be heard by all. Norris.

ARCHA'NGEL. n. ſ. [lamium, Lat.] The name of a plant, called alſo Dead nettle.

ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.

He ceas'd, and the archangelick pow'r prepar'd
For ſwift deſcent; with him the cohort bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

ARCHBE'ACON. n. ſ. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of proſpect, or of ſignal.

You ſhall win the top of the Corniſh archbeacon Hainborough, which may for proſpect compare with Rama in Paleſtina. Carew.

ARCHBI'SHOP. n. ſ. [from arch and biſhop.] A biſhop of the firſt claſs, who ſuperintends the conduct of other biſhops his ſuffragans.

Cranmer is return'd with welcome,
Inſtall'd lord archbiſhop of Canterbury. Shakeſp.

The archbiſhop was the known architect of this new fabrick. Clarendon.

ARCHBI'SHOPRICK. n. ſ. [from archbiſhop.] The ſtate or juriſdiction of an archbiſhop.

'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not beſtowing on him, at his aſking,
The archbiſhoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd.
Shakeſpeare.

This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbiſhoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

ARCHCHA'NTER. n. ſ. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.

ARCHDE'ACON. n. ſ. [archidiaconus, Lat.] One that ſupplies the biſhop's place and office in ſuch matters as do belong to the epiſcopal function. The law ſtyles him the biſhop's vicar, or vicegerent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Leſt negligence might foiſt in abuſes, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONRY. n. ſ. [archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office or juriſdiction of an archdeacon.

It oweth ſubjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry. Carew's Survey.

ARCHDE'ACONSHIP. n. ſ. [from archdeacon.] The office of an archdeacon.

ARCHDU'KE. n. ſ. [archidux, Lat.] A title given

A'RCHAISM. n. ſ. [ἀρχαισμὸς.] An ancient phraſe, or mode of expreſſion.

I ſhall never uſe archaiſms, like Milton. Watts.

A'RCHED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shakſpeare.

Let the arched knife,
Well ſharpen'd, now aſſail the ſpreading ſhades
Of vegetables. Philips.

A'RCHER. n. ſ. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that ſhoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head. Shakſpeare.

This Cupid is no longer an archer, his quiver ſhall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Shakſpeare.

Thou frequent bring'ſt the ſmitten deer,
For ſeldom, archers ſay, they miſs. Prior.

A'RCHERY. n. ſ. [from archer.]

1. The uſe of the bow.

Among the Engliſh artillery, archery challengeth the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camden.

2. The act of ſhooting with the bow.

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye! Shakſpeare's Midſ. Night's Dream.

3. The art of an archer.

Bleſt ſeraphims that ſerve their quire,
And turn love's ſoldier upon fire,
To exerciſe their archery. Crashaw's Steps to the Temple.

Say, from what golden quiver of the ſky
Do all the winged arrows fly?
Swiftneſs and power by both are thine.
Sir, I believe this archery to ſhew,
That ſo much cost in colours thou
And ſkill in painting doſt beſtow
Upon thy ancient arms, the gaudy heavenly bow. Cowley

A'RCHES-COURT. n. ſ. [from arches and court.] The chief and moſt ancient conſiſtory that belongs to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the debating of ſpiritual cauſes, ſo called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whoſe top is raiſed of ſtone pillars, built arch-wiſe. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, becauſe with this office is commonly joined a peculiar juriſdiction of thirteen pariſhes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the biſhop of London, and belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury; of which the pariſh of Bow is one. Some others ſay, that he was firſt called dean of the arches, becauſe the official to the archbiſhop, the dean of the arches, was his ſubſtitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The juriſdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: ſo that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cauſe, ſends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Cowell.

A'RCHETYPE. n. ſ. [archetypum, Lat.] The original of which any reſemblance is made.

Our ſouls, though they might have perceived images themſelves by ſimple ſenſe, yet it ſeems inconceivable, how they ſhould apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepſis.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas, ſo our ſenſations of hunger, cold, are alſo inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of theſe things, as they are in the mind, are the idea. Watts's Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Though conſumption's opticks I have ſeen
Hum the inner from the ſoul of man:
The ſubſtance of good, the light archetypal. Norris.

ARCHEUS. n. ſ. [probably from ἄρχω.] A word by which Paracelſus ſeems to have meant a power that preſides over the animal œconomy, diſtinct from the rational ſoul.

ARCHIDIA'CONAL. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be cenſured in an archidiaconal viſitation.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL adj. [from archiepiſcopus, Lat. an archbiſhop.] Belonging to an archbiſhop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiſcopal ſee; the ſuffragans are ſubject to archiepiſcopal juriſdiction.

A'RCHITECT. n. ſ. [architectus, Lat.]

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἀρχὸς, chief, and τέκτων, an artificer.] That which has the power or ſkill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.

To ſay that ſome more fine part of aether, or all the hypothetical principles, is the architect of this elaborate ſtructure, is to give occaſion to demand what proportion of the two principles of this architectonick ſpirit, and what ſpecific meaſure of ſkill and power a mixture. Bent.

ARCHITE'CTURE. n. ſ. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or ſcience of building.

Architecture is divided into civil and military, called by way of contempt fortification, and civil architecture, or fortification, and naval architecture, which, beſides building of ſhips and veſſels, includes alſo ports, moles, docks, &c. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture ſkill'd,
Cities for uſe, and forts for ſtrength build:
Then palaces and lofty dome aſpire,
Theſe for devotion, and for pleaſure thoſe. Dryden.

2. The effect or performance of the ſcience of building.

The formation of the firſt earth being a piece of divine architecture, aſcribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. ſ. [from ἀρχὸς, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; becauſe it is ſuppoſed to repreſent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the loweſt member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is ſometimes called the reaſon piece, or maſter beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloyſters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle-piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builder's Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightneſs whereof the architrave could not ſuffer, nor the common ruin be ſo ſubſtantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Weſtward a pompous front ſpiece appear'd,
On Doric pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And ſculpture riſing on the roughen'd gold. Pope.

A'RCHIVES. n. ſ. without a ſingular. [archivæ, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps ſometimes uſed for the writings themſelves.

Though we think our words vaniſh with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in

In God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witneſſes either for or againſt us.
Government of the Tongue.

I ſhall now only look a little into the Moſaic archives, to obſerve what they furniſh us with upon this ſubject, Woodward.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wiſe.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, ſo called ab arcuata eccleſia, or from Bow-church, by reaſon of the ſteeple or clochier thereof, raiſed at the top with ſtone pillars, in faſhion of a bow bent archwiſe.

1. In a circle.

He shall extend his propagated sway,
Where Atlas turns the rowling heav'ns around,
And his broad shoulders with their lights are crown'd.
Dryden.

2. On every side.

And all above was sky, and ocean all around.
Dryden.

ARO'UND. prep. About; encircling, so as to encompass.

From young Iülus head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brows, and on his temples fed. Dryd.

To ARO'USE. v. a. [from a and rouse.]

1. To wake from sleep.

How loud howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night. Shakesp.

2. To raise up; to excite.

But at last, what last of all woes arous'd
Regan to wish for night, by restless musing fed,
Cauld the warm check, and blast the bloom of life.
Thomson.

ARO'W. adv. [from a and row.] In a row; with the breasts all bearing against the same line.

Then some, seeing way are by the sailors worn
In chalky bays, till home they wake arow.
Sidney.

But when the second and more slow,
And twice, think not six, they rode arow.
Dryden.

ARO'YNT. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology, but very ancient use.] Be gone; away: a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the night mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakesp.

ARQUEBUSE. n. s. [Fr. spelt falsely hargubus.] A hand gun. It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carabine, or fusee.

A harquebus, or ordnance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides. Bacon.

ARQUEBUSIER, n. s. [from arquebuse.] A soldier armed with an arquebuse.

He compassed them in with fifteen thousand arquebusiers, whom he had brought with him well appointed. Knolles.

ARRACH, ORRACH, or ORRAGE. n. s. One of the quickest plants both in coming up and running to seed. Its leaves are very good in pottage.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

ARRACK, or ARACK. n. s. The word arrack is an Indian name for strong waters of all kinds; for they call our spirits and brandy English arrack. But what we understand by the name arrack, is no other than a spirit procured by distillation from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by incision out of the cocoa-nut tree. Chambers.

I find this to be better known for choice of china, tea, arrack, and other Indian goods.
Spectator.

To ARRAIGN. v. a. [arranger, Fr. to set in order.]

1. To set a thing in order, or in its place. One is said to arraign a writ in a county, that sits it for trial before the justices of the circuit. A prisoner is said to be arraigned, where he is indicted and brought forth to his trial. Cowell.

Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady; for as she hath
Been publickly accused, so shall she have
A just and open trial. Shakespeare.

2. To accuse; to charge with faults in general, as in controversy, in a satire.

Reverse of nature! shall such copies then
Arraign th' originals of Maro's pen? Roscommon.

He that thinks a man to the ground, will quickly endeavour to lay him there: for while he despises him, he arraigns and condemns him in his heart.
South.

3. It has for before the fault.

My own enemies I shall never answer; and if your lordship has any, they will not arraign you for want of knowledge.
Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ARRAIGNMENT. n. s. [from arraign.] The act of arraigning; an accusation; a charge.

In the sixth satire, which seems only an arraignment of the whole sex, there is a latent admonition to avoid ill women. Dryden.

To ARRANGE. v. a. [arranger, Fr.] To put in the proper order for any purpose.

I chanc'd this day
To see two knights in travel on my way,
(A sorry sight!) arrang'd in battle new.
Fairy Queen.

How effectually are its muscular fibres arranged, and with what judgment are its columns and furrows disposed! Cheyne.

ARRANGEMENT. n. s. [from arrange.] The act of putting in proper order; the state of being put in order.

There is a proper arrangement of the parts in elastick bodies, which may be facilitated by use.
Cheyne.

ARRANT. adj. [a word of uncertain etymology, but probably from errant, which being at first applied in its proper signification to vagabonds, as an errant or arrant rogue, that is, a rambling rogue, lost, in time, its original signification, and being by its use understood to imply something bad, was applied at large to any thing that was mentioned with hatred or contempt.] Bad in a high degree.

Country folks, who hallooed and hooted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy. Sidney.

A vain fool grows forty times an arranter fool than before. L'Estrange.

And let him every deity adore,
If his new bride prove not an arrant whore.
Dryden.

ARRANTLY. adv. [from arrant.] Corruptly; shamefully.

Funeral tears are as arrantly hired out as mourning cloaks. L'Estrange.

ARRAS. n. s. [from Arras, a town in Artois, where hangings are woven.] Tapestry; hangings woven with images.

Thence to the hall, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight.
Fairy Queen.

He's going to his mother's closet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
To hear the process. Shakespeare.

As he shall pass the galleries, I'll place
A guard behind the arras. Denham's Sophy.

ARRAUGHT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser in the preter tense, of which I have not found the present, but suppose he derived arraught from arracher, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious sons unto them twain
Arraught the rule, and from their father drew.
Fairy Queen.

ARRAY. n. s. [arroy, Fr. arreo, Sp. arredo, Ital. from reye, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, mille hominum arraitorum, Knighton.]

1. Order, chiefly of war.

The earl espying them scattered near the army, sent one to command them to their array. Hayward.

Wer't thou fought to deeds
That might require th' array of war, thy skill
Of conduct would be such, that all the world
Could not sustain thy prowess. Milton.

A general sets his army in array
In vain, unless he fight and win the day. Denham.

2. Dress.

A rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
On which there sat most brave embellished
With royal robes, and gorgeous array,
A maiden queen. Fairy Queen.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Arose, and dress'd herself in such array. Dryden.

3. In law. Array, of the Fr. arroy, i. e. ordo, the ranking or setting forth of a jury or inquest of men impannelled upon a cause. Thence is the verb to array a panel, that is, to set forth one by another the men impannelled. Cowell.

To ARRAY. v. a. [arroyer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order.

2. To deck; to dress; to adorn the person: with the particle with or in.

Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty. Job, xl. 10.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold
Empyreal. Milton.

One vest array'd the corpse, and one they spread
O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head.
Dryden.

3. In law. See ARRAY in law.

ARRAYERS. n. s. [from array.] Officers who anciently had the care of seeing the soldiers duly appointed in their armour.
Cowell.

ARREAR. adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive signification of the word, which, though not now in use, seems to be retained by Spenser. See REAR.

To leave with speed Atlanta swift arrear,
Through forests wild and untrequented land
To chase the lion, boar, or rugged bear.
Fairy Queen.

ARREAR. n. s. That which remains behind unpaid, though due. See ARREARAGE.

His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize; th' arrears are yet to pay.
Dryden.

If a tenant run away in arrear of some rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or lost. Locke.

It will comfort our grand-children, when they see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boasting, as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich. Swift.

ARREARAGE. n. s. A word now little used. [from arriere, Fr. behind.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as a arrearage of rent. Cowell.

Paget let forth the king of England's title to his debts and pollion from the French king; with all arrearages. Hayward.

He'll grant the tributs, fend the arrearages. Shakespeare.

The old arrearages under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed, he hath brought Lorrain to uphold and maintain herfelf. Howel's Vocal Forest.

ARREARANCE. n. f. The fame with arrear. See ARREAR. Dict.

ARRENTA'TION. n. f. [from arrendar, Span. to farm.] Is, in the foreft law, the licenfing an owner of lands in the foreft, to incloſe them with a low hedge and ſmall ditch, in conſideration of a yearly rent. Dict.

ARREPTI'TIOUS. adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.

2. [from ad and repo.] Crept in privily.

ARRE'ST. n. f. [from arreſter, Fr. to ſtop.]

1. In law.

A ſtop or ſtay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is ſaid to be arreſted. To plead in arreſt of judgment, is to ſhew cauſe why judgment ſhould be ſtayed, though the verdict of the twelve be paſſed. To plead in arreſt of taking the inqueſt upon the former iſſue, is to ſhew cauſe why an inqueſt ſhould not be taken. An arreſt is a certain reſtraint of a man's perſon, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of impriſonment. Cowell.

If I could ſpeak ſo wiſely under an arreſt, I would ſend for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of impriſonment. Shakeſpeare.

2. Any caption, ſeizure of the perſon.

To the rich man, who had promiſed himſelf eaſe for many years, it was a ſad arreſt, that his ſoul was ſurpriſed the firſt night. Taylor.

3. A ſtop.

The ſtop and arreſt of the air ſheweth, that the air hath little appetite of aſcending. Bacon.

To ARRE'ST. v. a. [arreſter. Fr. to ſtop.]

1. To ſeize by a mandate from a court or officer of juſtice. See ARREST.

Good tidings, my lord Haſtings, for the which I do arreſt thee, traitor, of high treaſon. Shakeſp.

There's one yonder arreſted, and carried to priſon, was worth five thouſand of you all. Shakeſp.

2. To ſeize any thing by law.

He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but twenty pounds of money, which muſt be paid to maſter Brook; his horſes are arreſted for it. Shakeſpeare.

3. To ſeize; to lay hands on; to detain by power.

But when as Morpheus had with leaden maze
Arreſted all that goodly company. Fairy Queen.

Age itſelf, which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied, ſhall begin to arreſt, ſeize, and remind us of our mortality. South.

4. To withhold; to hinder.

This defect of the Engliſh juſtice was the main impediment that did arreſt and ſtop the courſe of the conqueſt. Davis.

As often as my dogs with better ſpeed
Should ſtretch her flight, ſhe to death decreed. Dryden.

Not could her virtues, nor repeated vows
Of thouſand lovers, the relentleſs hand
Of death arreſt. Philips.

5. To ſtop motion.

To manifeſt the coagulative power, we have arreſted the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into curdled ſubſtance. Boyle.

6. To obſtruct; to ſtop.

Aſcribing the cauſes of things to ſecret properties, hath arreſted and laid aſleep all true enquiry. Bacon.

ARRE'ST. n. f. [In horſemanſhip.] A mangey humour between the ham and paſtern of the hinder legs of a horſe. Dict.

A'RRETED. adj. [arrectatus, low Lat.] He that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is uſed ſometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arreted to one under age. Cowell.

To ARRI'DE. v. a. [arrideo, Lat.]

1. To laugh at.

2. To ſmile; to look pleaſantly upon one.

ARRI'ERE. n. f. [French.] The laſt body of an army, for which we now uſe rear.

The horſemen might iſſue forth without diſturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without ſhuffling with the battail or arriere. Hayw.

ARRI'ERE BAN. n. f. [Caſſeneuve derives this word from arriere and ban; ban denotes the convening of the nobleſſe or vaſſals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, thoſe who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France ſummons to the war all that hold of him, both his own vaſſals or the nobleſſe, and the vaſſals of his vaſſals.

ARRI'ERE FEE, or FIEF. Is a fee dependant on a ſuperior one. Theſe fees commenced, when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, diſtributed to their officers parts of the domains, and permitted thoſe officers to gratify the ſoldiers under them in the ſame manner.

ARRI'ERE VASSAL. The vaſſal of a vaſſal. Trevoux.

ARRI'SION. n. f. [arriſio, Lat.] A ſmiling upon. Dict.

ARRI'VAL. n. f. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpoſe.

How are we chang'd ſince we firſt ſaw the queen!
She, like the ſun, does ſtill the ſame appear,
Bright as ſhe was at her arrival here. Waller.

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulyſſes upon his own iſland. Broome's View of Epic Poetry.

ARRI'VANCE. n. f. [from arrive.] Company coming: not in uſe.

Every minute's expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakeſpeare.

To ARRI'VE. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on ſhore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile,
Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down. Dryden.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived upon the verge of his eſtate, we ſtopped at a little inn, to reſt ourſelves and our horſes. Sidney.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progreſs. Locke.

4. To gain any thing by progreſſive approach.

It is the higheſt wiſdom by deſpiſing the world to arrive at heaven; they are bleſſed who converſe with God. Taylor.

The virtuous may know in ſpeculation, what they could never arrive at by practice, and avoid the ſnares of the crafty. Addiſon.

5. The thing to which we arrive is always ſuppoſed to be good.

6. To happen: with to before the perſon. This ſenſe ſeems not proper.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives,
More to be valued than a thouſand lives. Waller.

To ARRO'DE. v. a. [arrodo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.

A'RROGANCE. } n. f. [arrogantia, Lat.]
A'RROGANCY. } The act or quality of taking much upon one's ſelf; that ſpecies of pride which conſiſts in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithſtanding ſhe's your wife,
And loves not me; be you, good lord, aſſur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakeſp.

Pride hath no other glaſs
To ſhew itſelf but pride; for ſupple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Shak.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Diſcourſing of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, enfreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Humility it expreſſes by the ſtooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we ſay, toſſed up. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

A'RROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the ſignory therein, muſt be vain and arrogant. Spenſer on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and ſtates, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

A'RROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may
Himſelf admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, becauſe to pleaſes you. Dryd.

Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of proweſs
Inherent, arrogantly thus preſum'd;
What if this ſword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave ſheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.

A'RROGANTNESS. n. f. [from arrogant.] The ſame with arrogance; which ſee. Dict.

To ARROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjuſt claims only prompted by pride.

I intend to deſcribe that battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Hayward.

The popes arrogated unto themſelves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal ſtate,
Will arrogate dominion undeſerv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton.

Rome never arrogated to herſelf any infallibility, but what ſhe pretended to be founded upon Chriſt's promiſe. Tillotſon.

ARROGA'TION. n. f. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjuſt manner. Dict.

ARRO'SION. n. f. [from arroſus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'RROW. n. f. [ærepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is ſhot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand, but in poetry they are confounded.

I ſwear to thee by Cupid's ſtrongeſt bow,
By his beſt arrow with the golden head. Shakeſp.

Here were boys ſo deſperately reſolved, as to pull arrows out of the foe's fleſh, and deliver them to be ſhot again by the archers on their ſide. Hayward.

A'RROWHEAD. n. f. [from arrow and head.] A water plant; ſo called from the reſemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'RROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Conſiſting of arrows.

He ſaw them in their forms of battle rang'd,
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them ſhot
Sharp ſleet of arrowy ſhow'r againſt the face
Of their purſuers, and o'ercame by flight. Milton.

ARSE, n. ſ. [earſe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phraſe, ſignifying to be tardy, ſluggiſh, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one ſpur,
As wiſely knowning, could he ſtir
To active trot one ſide of 's horſe,
The other would not hang an arſe. Hudibras.

ARSE-FOOT. n. ſ. A kind of water-fowl, called alſo a didapper. Dict.

ARSE-SMART. n. ſ. [perſicaria, Lat.] An herb.

A'RSENAL. n. ſ. [arſenale, Ital.] A repoſitory of things requiſite to war; a magazine of military ſtores.

I would have a room for the old Roman inſtruments of war, where you might ſee all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arſenal of old Rome. Addiſon.

ARSE'NICAL. adj. [from arſenick.] Containing arſenick; conſiſting of arſenick.

An hereditary conſumption, or one engendered by arſenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey.

There are arſenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward.

A'RSENICK. n. ſ. [ἀρσενικον.] A ponderous mineral ſubſtance, volatile and uninflammable, which gives a whiteneſs to metals in fuſion, and proves a violent corroſive poiſon; of which there are three ſorts. Native or yellow arſenick, called alſo auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper-mines. White or cryſtalline arſenick is extracted from the native kind, by ſubliming it with a proportion of ſea ſalt: the ſmalleſt quantity of cryſtalline arſenick, being mixed with any metal, abſolutely deſtroys its malleability: and a ſingle grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful ſeeming ſilver, but without ductility. Red arſenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral ſulphur. Chambers.

Arſenick is a very deadly poiſon; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodward on Foſſils.

ART. n. ſ. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing ſomething not taught by nature and inſtinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Bleſt with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.
Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The laſt and greateſt art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A ſcience; as, the liberal arts.

Arts that reſpect the mind were ever reputed nobler than thoſe that ſerve the body. Ben Jonſon.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not underſtand? Dryden.

3. A trade.

This obſervation is afforded us by the art of making ſugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulneſs; ſkill; dexterity.

The art of our heceſſities is ſtrange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakeſp.

5. Cunning.

More matter, with leſs art. Shakeſpeare.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it ſo. Shakeſp.

ARTE'RIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery; that which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the ſpringy frame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languiſh'd in the arterial road.
Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle paſſeth through the arterial tube, it is preſſed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward againſt the ſides of the tube, and the elaſtick force of the air preſſing it on the oppoſite ſides of thoſe air-bladders, along the ſurface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀρτηρια, and τεμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in uſe among the French.

A'RTERY. n. ſ. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is compoſed of three coats; of which the firſt ſeems to be a thread of fine blood veſſels and nerves, for nouriſhing the coats of the artery; the ſecond is made up of circular, or rather ſpiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer ſtrata, according to the bigneſs of the artery. Theſe fibres have a ſtrong elaſticity, by which they contract themſelves with ſome force, when the power by which they have been ſtretched out ceaſes. The third and inmoſt coat is a fine tranſparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwiſe, upon the dilatation of an artery, would eaſily ſeparate the ſpiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow ſmaller, theſe coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins ſeem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elaſtic tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood ſtill forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The laſt of theſe was certainly the moſt eaſy, but, for the ſame reaſon, the leaſt artful. Dryden.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; ſkilful; dexterous.

O ſtill the ſame, Ulyſſes, ſhe rejoin'd,
In uſeful craft ſucceſsfully refin'd,
Artful in ſpeech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; ſkilfully; dexterouſly.

The reſt in rank: Honoria, chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to ſet her face
To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryd.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption.
How irreſiſtibly muſt it prevail, whe the ſeeds of it are artfully ſown, and induſtriouſly cultivated!
Rogers.

A'RTFULNESS. n. ſ. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Conſider with how much artfulneſs his bulk and ſituation is contrived, to have juſt matter to draw round him theſe maſſy bodies. Cheyne.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRI'TICAL. } adj. [from arthritis.]
ARTHRI'TICK. }

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diſeaſe. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leeches, though ſome want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and muſculous parts, are able to make progreſſion.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ARTHRITIS. n. ſ. [ἀρθρίτις, from ἀρθρον, a joint.] Any diſtemper that affects the joints, but the gout particularly. Quincy.

ARTICHOKE. n. ſ. [artichault, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thiſtle, but hath large ſcaly heads ſhaped like the cone of the pine-tree; the bottom of each ſcale, as alſo at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleſhy eatable ſubſtance. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the ſtalk, another to the fruit or ſeed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, ſtimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'RTICHOKE of Jeruſalem. A ſpecies of ſun-flower.

A'RTICK. adj. [it ſhould be written arctick, from ἀρκτικος.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like thoſe beyond the artick circle; for the ſun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example it is, contrary to cuſtom, ſpelt after the French manner, and accented on the laſt ſyllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,
As map informs, of fifty-three,
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty-one,
Methinks all climes ſhould be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE. n. ſ. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of ſpeech, as, the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A ſingle clauſe of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine, not ſo. Hooker.

Have the ſummary of all our griefs,
When time ſhall ſerve to ſhew in articles. Shakeſp.

Many believe the article of remiſſion of ſins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwiſe than God intended it.
Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promiſes, and threatenings of the goſpel will riſe up in judgment againſt us; and the articles of our faith will be ſo many articles of accuſation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the goſpel which we profeſſed to believe; that we made confeſſion of the chriſtian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotſon.

You have ſmall reaſon to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; ſtipulations.

I embrace theſe conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakeſpeare.

It would have gall'd his ſurly nature,
Which eaſily endures not article,
Tying him to aught. Shakeſpeare.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Canſield had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk charge, by which other troops were ready, the king himſelf had been in danger.
Clarendon.

To A'RTICLE. v. n. [from the noun article.] To ſtipulate; to make terms.

Such

Such is love's warfare is my case,
I may not wield for grace,
Having put love at last to show this face. Donne.

He had not infringed the least tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Howel's Vocal Forest.

If it be said, God chose the successor, that is manifestly not so in the story of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

To A'RTICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whose life seems fair, yet if all his errours and follies were articled against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ARTI'CULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. In medicine, an epithet applied to a disease, which more immediately infests the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

ARTI'CULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; divided, as the parts of a limb are divided by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admit no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon.

The first, at least, of these I thought denyed
To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day,
Created mute to all articulate sound. Milton.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers on either hand. On the left, they accounted their digits and articulate numbers unto an hundred; on the right hand, hundreds and thousands.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in use.

Henry's instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquisition, than negotiation: requiring an answer in distinct articles to his questions. Bacon.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to utter distinct syllables; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices.
Glanville.

Parisian academists, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muscles of their tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like those of man. Ray on the Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakespeare.

3. To make terms; to treat. These two latter significations are unusual.

Send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate
For their own good and ours. Shakespeare.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. n. To speak distinctly.

ARTI'CULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The secret purpose of our heart, no less articulately spoken to God, who needs not our words to discern our meaning. Decay of Piety.

2. Cannon; great ordnance.

Ha! I not hear'd great ordnance in the field?
And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Shakesp.

I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,
To view th' artillery and munition. Shakesp.

Upon one wing the artillery was drawn, but sixteen pieces, every piece having a great way. Haywards.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery against the weakest place. Dryden.

ARTISA'N. n. s. [French.]

1. Artist; professor of an art.

What are the most judicious artisans, but the mimicks of nature? Wotton's Architecture.

Best and happiest artisan,
Best of painters, if you can,
With your many colour'd art,
Draw the noblest of my heart. Cowley.

2. Manufacturer; low tradesman.

I who had some better means to oppose me, must have an artisan for my antagonist. Addison.

A'RTIST. n. s. [artiste, Fr.]

1. The professor of an art, generally of an art manual.

How to build ships, what bodies best withstand,
Instruct the artists, and reward their hand. Waller.

Rich with the spoils of many a conquer'd land,
All arts and artists Thebes could command,
Who sold for hire, or sought for better fame:
The master painters and the carvers came. Dryd.

When I made this, an artist undertook to imitate it; but using another way, it fell much short. Newton's Opticks.

2. A skilful man; not a novice.

If any one thinks himself an artist at this, let him number up the parts of his child's body. Locke.

A'RTLESLY. adv. [from artless.]

Addison on Italy.

10. As it were; in some sort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;
Infected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue.
Dryden.

These haughty words Alecto's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as she spoke.
Dryden.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines.
Addison's Cato.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound; then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did so assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. Because it is; because they are.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sybil's words as many times rebound. Dryden.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Stern, well met; whither away so fast?—
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
Shakesp. Richard III.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far both as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As there is good, that human nature should exist; so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair.
Granville.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage? Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As to my speculations, I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Spectator.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou, to whom the muse commends
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison's Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick wabbles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. As FOR; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As IF; in the same manner that it would be if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. As TO; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakesp. Othello.

They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards Christianity. Addison on Italy.

I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Swift.

To him with swift ascent he up return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd
In glory, as of old. Milton.

2. The way by which one ascends.

The temple, and the several degrees of ascent whereby men did climb up to the same, as if it had been a scala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous.
Bacon.

It was a rock
Conspicuous far; winding with one ascent
Accessible from earth, one entrance high. Milton.

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy excels the sight
By such a vast ascent, or swells to such a height.
Addison.

A wide flat cannot be pleasant in the Elysian fields, unless it be diversified with depressed valleys and swelling ascents. Bentley.

To ASCERTA'IN. v. a. [acertener, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix; to establish.

The divine law both ascertaineth the truth, and supplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker.

Money differs from uncoined silver in this, that the quantity of silver in each piece is ascertained by the stamp. Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt: often with of.

Right judgment of myself, may give me the other certainty; that is, ascertain me that I am in the number of God's children.
Hammond's Practical Catechism.

This makes us act with a repose of mind and wonderful tranquillity, because it ascertains us of the goodness of our work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

ASCERTA'INER. n. s. [from ascertain.] The person that proves or establishes.

ASCERTA'INMENT. n. s. [from ascertain.] A settled rule; an established standard.

And when he ſaw their labours well ſucceed,
He wept for rage, and threaten'd dire miſchance.
Fairfax.

Some ſay, he bid his angels turn aſkance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,
From the ſun's axle; they with labour puſh'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

Aska'unt. adv. Obliquely; on one ſide.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king aſkaunt; and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden.

Since the ſpace, that lies on either ſide
The ſolar orb, is without limits wide,
Grant that the ſun had happen'd to poſſeſs
A ſeat aſkaunt, but one diameter;
Loſt to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had lain a frozen loathſome maſs.
Blackmore.

A'sker. n. ſ. [from aſk.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the aſker? and now again
On him that did not aſk, but mock, beſtow.
Shakeſpeare.

The greatneſs of the aſker, and the ſmallneſs of the thing aſked, had been ſufficient to enforce his requeſt. South.

2. Enquirer.

Every aſker being ſatisfied, we may conclude that all their conceptions of being in a place are the ſame. Digby of Bodies.

A'sker. n. ſ. A water newt.

Aske'w. adv. [from a and ſkew.] Aſide; with contempt.

For when ye mildly look with lovely hue,
Then is my ſoul with life and love inſpir'd:
But when ye lowre, or look on me aſkew,
Then do I die. Spenſer.

Then take it, Sir, as it was writ,
Nor look aſkew at what it ſaith;
There's no petition in it. Prior.

To Asla'ke. v. a. [from a and ſlake, or ſlack.] To remit; to mitigate; to ſlacken. Obſolete.

There is a willow grows aſlant a brook,
That ſhews his hoar leaves in the glaſſy ſtream.
Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

He fell; the ſhaft
Drove thro' his neck aſlant; he ſpurns the ground,
And the ſoul iſſues through the weaſon's wound.
Dryden.

Asle'ep. adv. [from a and ſleep.]

1. Sleeping; at reſt.

How many thouſands of my pooreſt ſubjects
Are at this hour aſleep! O gentle ſleep,
Nature's ſoft nurſe, how have I frighted thee!
Shakeſpeare.

The diligence of trade, and noiſeful gain,
And luxury more late aſleep were laid:
All was the night's, and in her ſilent reign,
No ſound the reſt of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference between a perſon aſleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To sleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep. Bacon's Essays.

To ASSO'T. v. a. [from sot; assoter, Fr.] To infatuate; to besot: a word out of use.

Bar whence they sprung, or how they were begot,
Unearth to assure, unearth to wear
That monstrous error which doth some assot.
Sandys.

To ASSUA'GE. v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain: Minsheu deduces it from assuadere, or assuavisare; Junius, from ysgav, sweet; from whence Skinner imagines appeasan might have been formed.]

1. To mitigate; to soften; to allay.

Returning winds the summer's heats assuage,
And kindly warmth dilates the wintery'd tage.
Addison.

2. To appease; to pacify.

Yet to his hate, his love was ne'er the less,
Since no right assuageth malice when 'tis told.
Daniel.

This was necessary for the securing the people from their fears, capable of being assuaged by no other means. Clarendon.

Shall I, t' assuage
Their brutal rage,
The regal form destroy? Dryden's Albion.

3. To ease; as, the medicine assuages pain.

To ASSUA'GE. v. n. To abate.

God made a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters assuaged. Gen. viii. 1.

ASSUA'GEMENT. n. f. [from assuage.] Mitigation; abatement of evil.

Tell me, when shall these weary days end,
Or shall their ruthless torment never cease,
But all my days in pining languor spend,
Without hope of assuagement or release.
Spenser's Sonnets.

ASSUA'GER. n. f. [from assuage.] One who pacifies or appeases.

ASSUA'SIVE. adj. [from assuage.] Softening; mitigating.

If in the breast tumultuous joys arise,
Musick her soft assuasive voice supplies.
Pope's St. Cæcilia.

To ASSU'BJUGATE. v. a. [subjugo, Lat.] To subject to: not in use.

This valiant lord
Must not so state his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor by my will assubjugate his merit,
By going to Achilles. Shakespeare.

ASSUEFA'CTION. n. f. [assuefactio, Lat.] The state of being accustomed to any thing.

Right and left, as parts inservient unto the motive faculty, are differenced by degrees from use and assuefaction, or according whereto the one grows strong. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASSUE'TUDE. n. f. [assuetudo, Lat.] Accustomance; custom; habit.

We see that assuetude of things hurtful doth make them lose the force to hurt. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To ASSU'ME. v. n. To be arrogant; to claim more than is due.

ASSU'MER. n. f. [from assume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than his due.

Can man be wise in any course, in which he is not sure too? But can they high assumers, and pretenders to reason, prove themselves so? South.

ASSU'MING. participial adj. [from assume.] Arrogant; haughty.

His haughty looks, and his assuming air,
The fort of his invalid no longer bear. Dryden.

This makes him over-to wise in business, assuming a conceitedness, and peremptory in answers. Collier.

ASSUMPSIT. n. f. [assumo, Lat.] A voluntary promise made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another; it contains any verbal promise made upon consideration. Cowell.

ASSU'MPTION. n. f. [assumptio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking any thing to one's self.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, more familiarly to insinuate his pleasure to us, was an enforcement beyond all methods of wisdom.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. The supposition, or act of supposing, of any thing without further proof.

These by way of assumption, under the two general propositions, are intrinsically and naturally good or bad. Norris.

3. The thing supposed; a postulate.

Hold, says the Stoick, your assumption's wrong: I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryd.

For the assumption, that Christ did such miraculous and supernatural works to confirm what he said, we need only repeat the message sent by him to John the Baptist. South.

4. The taking up any person into heaven, which is supposed by the Romish church of the Blessed Virgin.

Upon the feast of the assumption of the Blessed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the vespers. Stillingfleet.

Adam, after a certain period of years, would have been rewarded with an assumption to eternal felicity. Wake.

ASSU'MPTIVE. adj. [assumptivus, Lat.] That is assumed.

ASSU'RANCE. n. s. [assurance, Fr.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be, indeed, a lower and lesser thing than assurance, yet, as to all the purposes of a present life, it may prove more useful. South.

What encouragement can be given to go directly beyond the bounds of heaven, and the assurance of a certainty? Tillotson.

2. Secure confidence; trust.

What man is he that boasts of fleshly might,
And vain assurance of mortality,
Which all and sundry doth to combat fight
And daily warfare, yields by and by. Fairy Q.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.

Proof from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that assurance, which doth grow by a sufficient proof. Hooker.

'Tis far off,
And rather like a dream, than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Shak. Tempest.

The orderly, and the man of practice, shall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, till perfection pass into knowledge, and knowledge advance into assurance. South.

Hath he found, in any civil court, that comfortable assurance of God's favour, and good hope of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him? Wilkins.

4. Firmness; undoubting steadiness.

Men whose consciences will retrieve our modesty, and give us courage and assurance in the time of our profession. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modesty; exemption from awe or fear.

My behaviour, ill governed, gave you the first comfort; my affection, ill hid, hath given you this last assurance. Sidney.

6. Freedom from vitious shame.

Conversation, when they come into the world will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; security; sufficient reason for trust or belief.

The nature of desire itself is no other to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first show of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance. Sidney.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial so the pope's donation to the Irish submissions were but weak and sickly assurances. Davies on Ireland.

None of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth.
—Then live, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live.
Shakespeare.

I must confess your offer is the best,
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own, else you must pardon me;
If you should die before him, where's her dower?
Shakespeare.

An assurance being passed through for a competent fine, hath come back again by reason of some oversight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.

They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach with more assurance than the wall itself. Knolles.

With all th' assurance innocence can bring,
Fearless without, because secure within;
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
This pomp, a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryd.

9. Sanguineness; readiness to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond.

10. Testimony of credit.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
And, from some knowledge and assurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakespeare's King Lear.

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson.

11. Conviction.

Such an assurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillotson.

12. [In theology.] Security with respect to a future state; certainty of acceptance with God.

13. The same with insurance. See INSURANCE.

To ASSU'RE. v. a. [assurer, Fr. from assecurare low Latin.]

So when he had assured them with many words that he would restore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saving of their brethren. 2 Mac. xii.

2. To secure to another; to make firm.

So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those which piety assures its favour to them. Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. 1 John, iii. 19

I revive
At this last sight; assur'd that man shall live
With all the creatures, and their seed preserve.
Milton.

4. To make secure: with of.

But what on earth can long abide in state?
Or who can him assure of happy day? Spenser.

And, for that dow'ry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Shakesp.

5. To affiance; to betroth.

This gentleman had claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her. Shakespeare.

ASSU'RED. participial adj. [from assure.]

To ASSWA'GE. See ASSUAGE.

A'STERISK. n. s. [ἀστερίσκος.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star; as *.

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant. Grew.

A'STERISM. n. s. [asterismus, Lat.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry had filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an asterism: for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

ASTE'RN. adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern, descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep. Dryd.

To ASTE'RT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;
But knew we fools what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert;
No danger there the shepherd can aster. Spenser.

A'STHMA. n. s. [ἄσθμα.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night-time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax. Floyer on the Humours.

ASTHMA'TICAL. } adj. [from asthma.]
ASTHMA'TICK. } Troubled with an asthma.

In asthmatical persons, though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years. Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatical; and, for avoiding the wattering of them, we wet their hay. Floyer.

ASTO'NIED. part. adj. A word used in the version of the Bible for astonished.

Many were astoned at thee. Jonah, iii. 14.

Unmanly dread invades
The French astoni'd. J. Philips.

[illegible] and tremble.
When [illegible] sickness, and [illegible] like
Shakespeare.

Aſtoniſh'd at the voice, he ſtood amaz'd,
And all around with inward horror gaz'd. Addiſon.
A godlike univerſal as his theme,
Aſtoniſhing as chaos. Thomſon.

ASTO'NISHINGNESS. n. ſ. [from aſtoniſh.] Of a nature to excite aſtoniſhment.

ASTO'NISHMENT. n. ſ. [eſtonnement, Fr.] Amazement; confuſion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no leſs wonder to us than aſtoniſhment to themſelves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers. Sidney.

She eſteemed this as much above his wiſdom, as aſtoniſhment is beyond bare admiration. South.

To ASTO'UND. v. a. [eſtonner, Fr.] To aſtoniſh; to confound with fear or wonder. This word is now ſomewhat obſolete.

Theſe thoughts may ſtartle well, but not aſtound
The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
By a ſtrong ſiding champion, conſcience. Milton.

ASTRA'DDLE. adv. [from a and ſtraddle.] With one's legs acroſs any thing. Dict.

A'STRAGAL. n. ſ. [ἀστράγαλος, the ankle or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, ſerving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Builder's Dict.

We ſee none of that ordinary confuſion, which is the reſult of quarter rounds of the aſtragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator.

A'STRAL. adj. [from aſtrum, Lat.] Starry; belonging to the ſtars.

Some aſtral forms I muſt invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of pureſt atoms of the air;
Not in their natures ſimply good or ill,
But moſt ſubſervient to bad ſpirits will. Dryden.

ASTRA'Y. adv. [from a and ſtray.] Out of the right way.

May ſeem the wain was very evil led,
When ſuch an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not whether right he went, or elſe
aſtray. Spenſer.

You run aſtray, for whilſt we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland. Spenſer on Ireland.

Like one that had been led aſtray
Through the heav'ns wide pathleſs way. Milton.

To ASTRI'CT. v. a. [aſtringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in oppoſition to relax: a word not ſo much uſed as conſtringe.

The ſolid parts were to be relaxed or aſtricted, as they let the humours paſs either in too ſmall or too great quantities. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRI'CTION. n. ſ. [aſtrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Aſtriction is in a ſubſtance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the ſame means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an aſtriction, but ſuch an aſtriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleaſing aſtriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them; and therefore ſuch aſtriction is found in things of a harſh taſte. Bacon.

Lenitive ſubſtances are proper for dry atrabilarian conſtitutions, who are ſubject to aſtriction of the belly, and the piles. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRI'CTIVE adj. [from aſtrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

ASTRI'CTORY. adj. [aſtrictorius, Lat.] Aſtringent; apt to bind. Dict.

ASTRI'DE. adv. [from a and ſtride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aſide,
Their modeſty, and ride aſtride. Hudibras.

I ſaw a place, where the Rhone is ſo ſtraitened between two rocks, that a man may ſtand aſtride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [aſtrifer, Lat.] Bearing or having ſtars. Dict.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [aſtriger, Lat.] Carrying ſtars. Dict.

To ASTRI'NGE. v. a. [aſtringo, Lat.] To preſs by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are cauſed by a contraction of the ſpirits of the brain; which contraction, by conſequence, aſtringeth the moiſture of the brain, and thereby ſendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRI'NGENCY. n. ſ. [from aſtringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; oppoſed to the power of relaxation.

Aſtriction prohibiteth diſſolution; as, in medicines, aſtringents inhabit putrefaction: and, by aſtringency, ſome ſmall quantity of oil of vitriol will keep freſh water long from putreſying. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Acid, acrid, auſtere, and bitter ſubſtances, by their aſtringency, create horrour, that is, ſtimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRI'NGENT. adj. [aſtringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; oppoſed to laxative: it is uſed ſometimes of taſtes which ſeem to contract the mouth.

Aſtringent medicines are binding, which act by the aſperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up cloſer. Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures, for it is ſweet and yet aſtringent. Bacon.

The juice is very aſtringent, and therefore of ſlow motion. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

What diminiſheth ſenſible perſpiration, encreaſeth the inſenſible; for that reaſon a ſtrengthening and aſtringent diet often conduceth to this purpoſe. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'STROGRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἀστρον and γραφω.] The ſcience of deſcribing the ſtars. Dict.

A'STROLABE. n. ſ. [of ἀστὴρ, and λαβεῖν, to take.]

1. An inſtrument chiefly uſed for taking the altitude of the pole, the ſun, or ſtars, at ſea.
2. A ſtereographick projection of the circles of the ſphere upon the plain of ſome great circle. Chambers.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. ſ. [aſtrologus, Lat. from ἀστρον and λόγος.]

1. One that, ſuppoſing the influences of the ſtars to have a cauſal power, profeſſes to foretel or diſcover events depending on thoſe influences.

Not unlike that which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the ſtars, ſay the aſtrologers; on the organs of the body, ſay the naturaliſts; it is the particular gift of heaven, ſay the divines, both chriſtians and heathens. Dryden.

Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew. Pope.

I never heard a finer ſatire againſt lawyers, than that of aſtrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a ſuit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was anciently uſed for one that underſtood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy aſtrologer, by perſpective glaſſes, hath found in the ſtars many things unknown to the ancients. Raleigh.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. ſ. [from aſtrology.] The ſame with aſtrologer.

The twelve houſes of heaven, or the ſolid which aſtrologians uſe. Camden.

The ſtars, they ſay, cannot diſpoſe
No more than can the aſtrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. } adj. [from aſtrology.]
ASTROLO'GICK. }

1. Profeſſing aſtrology.

Some ſeem a little aſtrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No aſtrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been baniſh'd, or in chains. Dryden.

2. Relating to aſtrology.

Aſtrological prayers ſeem to me to be built on as good reaſon as the predictions. Stillingfleet.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the aſtrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley.

ASTROLO'GICALLY. adv. [from aſtrology.] In an aſtrological manner.

To ASTRO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from aſtrology.] To practiſe aſtrology.

ASTRO'LOGY. n. ſ. [aſtrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the ſtars; an art now generally exploded, as irrational and falſe.

I know the learned think of the art of aſtrology, that the ſtars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. ſ. [from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a rule or law.] One that ſtudies the celeſtial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings ought to be like the motions, as the aſtronomers ſpeak of, in the interiour orbs. Bacon.

Aſtronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the ſun. Locke.

The old and new aſtronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from aſtronomy.]
ASTRONO'MICK. } Belonging to aſtronomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the ſun's progreſs through the zodiack, they regiſtrate and ſet them down in their aſtronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not paſs an aſtronomick line,
Or dreads the ſun th' imaginary ſign,
That he ſhould ne'er advance to either pole? Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICALLY. adv. [from aſtronomical.] In an aſtronomical manner.

ASTRO'NOMY. n. ſ. [ἀστρονομία, from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a law or rule.] A mixed mathematical ſcience, teaching the knowledge of the celeſtial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, diſtances, periods, eclipſes, and order. Pythagoras taught that the earth and planets turn round the ſun, which ſtands immoveable in the centre. From the time of Pythagoras, aſtronomy ſunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens brought it from Africa to Spain, and reſtored this ſcience to Europe. Chambers.

To this muſt be added the underſtanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and aſtronomy. Cowley.

A'STROSCOPY. n. ſ. [ἀστὴρ, a ſtar, and σκοπέω, to view.] Obſervation of the ſtars. Dict.

ASTRO-THEOLOGY, n. ſ. [from aſtrum, a ſtar, and theologia, divinity!] Divinity founded founded on the obſervation of the celeſtial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the ſun, I ſhew in the preface of my Aſtro-Theology.
Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

ASU'NDER. adv. [a'unbynan, Sax.] Apart; ſeparately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go aſunder.
Spenſer on Ireland.

Senſe thinks the planets ſpheres not much aſunder,
What tells us then their diſtance is ſo far? Davies.

Gladly hope to find
His wiſh, and beſt advantage, us aſunder.
Paradiſe Loſt.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our ſtate,
Seeks his advantage to betray us worſe;
Which, when aſunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryden.

Borne far aſunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and ſteel they meet again.
Dryden's Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued aſunder, and in ſingle corpuſcles, and that which was amaſſed and concreted into maſſes.
Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

ASY'LUM. n. ſ. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from α, not, and συλάω, to pillage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it may not be taken; a ſanctuary; a refuge; a place of retreat and ſecurity.

Some drew the church to ſome, that it had the dignity of an aſylum, or ſanctuary.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASYMMETRY. n. ſ. [from α, without, and συμμετρία, ſymmetry.]

1. Contrariety to ſymmetry; diſproportion.

The aſymmetry of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time.
Grew.

2. This term is ſometimes uſed in mathematicks, for what is more uſually called incommenſurability; when between two quantities there is no common meaſure.

A'SYMPTOTE. n. ſ. [from α, priv. συν, with, and πίπτω, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Aſymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to ſome curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite diſtance.
Chambers.

Aſymptotic lines, though they may approach ſtill nearer together, till they are nearer than the leaſt aſſignable diſtances, yet, being ſtill produced infinitely, will never meet.
Grew.

ASYMPTO'TICAL. adj. [from aſymptote.] Curves are ſaid to be aſymptotical, when they continually approach, without a poſſibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON. n. ſ. [ἀσύνδετον, of α, priv. and συνδέω, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a ſentence; as, in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

AT. prep. [æt, Saxon.]

1. At, before a place, notes the nearneſs of the place; as, a man is at the houſe before he is in it.

This cuſtom continued among many, to ſay their prayers at fountains.
Stillingfleet.

At, before a word ſignifying time, notes the coexiſtence of the time with the event; the word time is ſometimes included in the adjective; we commonly ſay, at a minute, at an hour, on a day, in a month.

We thought it at the very firſt a ſign of cold affection.
Hooker.

How frequent to deſert him, and at laſt
To heap ingratitude on worthieſt deeds.
Milton.

At the ſame time that the ſtorm beats upon the whole ſpecies, we are falling foul upon one another.
Addiſon.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have moſt weakened the common enemy, and, at the ſame time, enriched ourſelves.
Swift.

3. At, before a cauſal word ſignifies nearly the ſame as with, noting that the event accompanies, or immediately ſucceeds, the action of the cauſe.

At his touch,
Such ſanctity hath Heav'n giv'n his hand,
They preſently amend.
Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

O ſir, when he ſhall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Ev'n at the news he dies.
Shakeſp. King John.

To ATTA'INT. v. a. [attenter, Fr.]

1. To disgrace; to cloud with ignominy.

His warlike shield
Was all of diamond perfect pure and clean,
For so exceeding shone his glistering ray,
That Phœbus golden face it did attaint,
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay.
Fairy Queen.

2. To attaint is particularly used for such as are found guilty of some crime or offence, and especially of felony or treason. A man is attainted two ways, by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double; one at the bar before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers Guilty, never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury. The other is before the coroner or sanctuary, where he, upon his confession, was in former times constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed, and choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. Attainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment Not guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies, and is not found till five times called publickly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default. Cowell.

Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called? Spenser.

I must offend before I be attainted. Shakspeare.

3. To taint; to corrupt.

My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love. Shakspeare.

ATTA'INT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing injurious; as illness, weariness. This sense is now obsolete.

Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night,
But freshly looks, and overbears attaint
With cheerful semblance. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. Stain; spot; taint.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of; nor any man an attaint, but he carries some stain of it. Shakespeare.

ATTO'RNEY. n. ſ. [attornatus, low Lat. from tour, Fr. Celui qui vient à tour d'autrui; qui alterius vices ſubit.]

1. Such a perſon as by conſent, commandment, or requeſt, takes heed, ſees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's buſineſs, in their abſence. Attorney is either general or ſpecial: Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or ſuits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the ſame with Procurator Cæſaris in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before juſtices in eyre, in open court. Attorney ſpecial or particular, is he that is employed in one or more cauſes particularly ſpecified. There are alſo, in reſpect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys ſpecial, belonging to this or that court only. Cowell.

Attorneys in common law, are nearly the ſame with proctors in the civil law, and ſolicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys ſue out writs or proceſs, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other perſons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having ſerved a clerkſhip for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.

I am a ſubject,
And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me,
And therefore perſonally I lay my claim
To mine inheritance. Shakeſpeare.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confeſſions.
Shakeſpeare.

Deſpairing quacks with curſes fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an uſeleſs race. Pope.

2. It was anciently uſed for thoſe who did any buſineſs for another; now only in law.

I will attend my huſband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney but myſelf;
And therefore let me have him home. Shakeſp.

What if the ſun
Be centre to the world; and other ſtars,
By his attractive virtue, and their own,
Incited, dance about him various rounds? Milton.

Some, the round earth's coheſion to ſecure,
For that hard talk employ magnetick power,
Remark, ſay they, the globe with wonder own
Its nature, like the fam'd attractive ſtone.
Blackmore.

Bodies act by the attractions of gravity, magnetiſm, and electricity; and theſe inſtances make it not improbable but there may be more attractive powers than theſe. Newton.

2. Inviting; alluring; enticing.

Happy is Hermia, wherever ſhe lies;
For ſhe hath bleſſed and attractive eyes. Shakeſp.

I pleas'd, and with attractive graces won,
The moſt averſe, thee chiefly. Milton.

ATTRA'CTIVE. n. ſ. [from attract.] That which draws or incites; allurement: except that attractive is of a good or indifferent ſenſe, and allurement generally bad.

The condition of a ſervant ſtaves him off to a diſtance; but the goſpel ſpeaks nothing but attractives and invitation. South.

John had conned over a catalogue of hard words; theſe he uſed to babble indifferently in all companies. Arbuthnot.

Let the ſilent ſanctuary ſhow,
What from the babbling ſchools we may not know. Prior.

3. To talk thoughtleſsly; to tell ſecrets.

There is more danger in a reſerved and ſilent friend, than in a noiſy babbling enemy. L'Eſtrange.

4. To talk much.

The babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying ſhrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shakeſp.

And had I pow'r to give that knowledge birth,
In all the ſpeeches of the babbling earth. Prior.

The babbling echo had deſcry'd his face;
She, who in other's words her ſilence breaks. Addiſon.

Ba'bble. n. ſ. [babil, Fr.] Idle talk; ſenſeleſs prattle.

This babble ſhall not henceforth trouble me;
Here is a coil with proteſtation. Shakeſpeare.

Experience, that great baffler of speculation, assures us the thing is too possible, and brings, in all ages, matter of fact to confute our suppositions. Government of the Tongue.

BAG. n. s. [belge, Saxon; from whence perhaps, by dropping, as is usual, the harsh consonant, came bege, bage, bag.]

1. A sack, or pouch, to put any thing in, as money, corn.

Cousin, away for England; haste before,
And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots, their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

What is it that opens thy mouth in praises? Is it that thy bags and thy barns are full? South.

Waters were inclosed within the earth, as in a bag. Burnet.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke. Pope.

2. That part of animals in which some particular juices are contained, as the poison of vipers.

The swelling poison of the several sects,
Which, wanting vent, the nation's health infects,
Shall burst its bags. Dryden.

To BAIGNE. v. a. [baigner, Fr.] To drench; to soak: a word out of use.

The women forswear not to baigne them, unless they plead their heels, with a worse perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BAIL. n. s. [Of this word the etymologists give many derivations; it seems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himself up in surety.]

Bail is the freeing or setting at liberty one arrested or imprisoned upon action either civil or criminal, under security taken for his appearance. There is both common and special bail; common bail is in actions of small prejudice, or slight proof, called common, because any sureties in that case are taken: whereas, upon causes of greater weight, or upon special reality, special bail or sureties must be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprise; for he that is mainprised is at large, upon the day of his appearance; but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and custody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in prison at that time, or otherwise at their will. Cowell.

Worry'd with debts, and past all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roscommon.

And bribe with presents, or, when prayers fail,
They lend their prostituted wives for bail. Dryden.

To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

Let me be their bail——
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer their suspicion——
Thou shalt not bail them. Shakesp. Titus Andron.

2. To admit to bail.

When they had bailed the twelve bishops who were in the Tower, the house of Commons, in great indignation, caused them immediately to be recommitted to the Tower. Clarendon.

BA'ILABLE. adj. [from bail.] That may be set at liberty by bail or sureties.

BA'ILIFF. n. s. [a word of doubtful etymology in itself, but borrowed by us from baillie, Fr.]

1. A subordinate officer.

Lausanne is under the canton of Berne, governed by a bailiff sent every three years from the senate of Berne. Addison.

2. An officer whose business it is to execute arrests.

It many times happeneth, that, by the undersheriff and their bailiffs, the owner hath incurred the forfeiture, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process that runneth against him. Bacon.

A bailiff, by mistake, seized you for a debtor, and kept you the whole evening in a spunging-house. Swift.

Swift as a hard the bailiff leaves behind. Pope.

3. An under-steward of a manor.

BA'ILIWICK. n. s. [of baillie, Fr. and pic, Sax.] The place of the jurisdiction of a bailiff within his hundred, or the lord's franchise. It is that liberty which is exempted from the sheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff. Cowell.

A proper officer is to walk up and down his bailiwicks. Spenser.

And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To harass by the help of others; as, we bait a boar with mastiffs, but a bull with bull-dogs.

To BAIT. v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment: perhaps this word is more properly bate, to abate speed.

But our desires tyrannical extortion
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey bates at noon,
Tho' bent on speed: so here th' archangel paus'd. Milton.

In all our journey from London to his houſe, we did not ſo much as bait at a whig inn. Addiſon's Spectator.

To BAIT. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like eſtridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like im ges. Shak ſpeare.
Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till ſtrange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted ſimple modeſty. Shakeſp.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her as we watch thoſe kite.
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient. Shak.

BAIT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Meat ſet to allure fiſh, or other animals, to a ſnare.

BALL. n. f. [bol, Dan. bol, Dutch.]

Bal, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo, of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abelio. What ever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bal, or Bel, and likewise Rél and Bul. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Balle. Πόλος is the head or poll; and πολεῖν, is to turn. Βολος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and ball, and ball, which the Welch term bêl. By the Scotch also the head is named bâll; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thracians by Βαλλάν underst pod a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, Baâl, Bîl, and likewise βῶλος, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, Ἥλ and Ἴλ, whence Ἥλιος and Ἴλιος, Φίλιος and Βιλιος, and also, in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, Ἠέλιος, Φίλιος, and Βήλιος, signified the sun; and Ἠέλη, Φίλη, and Βήλη the moon. Among the Teutonicks, bol and bell have the same meaning; whence the adjective belig, or beilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form, or approaching to round.

Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the crystal darts. Addison.

Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.

Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reigns,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their pages,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pains. Sidney.

Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A small round thing, with some particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots cast.

Let lots decide it.

For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
The rest, all white, are safe. Dryden.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryd.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, those lords of all,

BALL. n. f. [bal, Fr. from balare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of some particular person.

If golden sconces hang not on the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dryden.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can assure the ladies, for their consolation, that he has writ better verses on the sex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD. n. s. [balade, Fr.] A song.

Ballad once signified a solemn and sacred song, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verse. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, may a cup of sack be my poison. Shakspeare.

Like the sweet ballad, this amusing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or sing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakespeare.

BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. s. [from ballad and sing.] One whose employment is to sing ballads in the streets.

No sooner 'gin he wife his tuneful song,
But lads and lasses round about him throng.
Not ballad-singer, placed above the crowd,
Sings with a note so shrilling, sweet, and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST. n. s. [ballaste, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ship, to keep it steady to the centre of gravity.

There must be middle counsellors to keep things steady; for, without that ballast, the ship will roul too much. Bacon.

As for the ascent of a submarine vessel, this may be easily contrived, if there be some great weight at the bottom of the ship, being part of its ballast, which, by some cord within, may be loosed from it. Wilkins.

As, when empty barks or bellows float,
With sandy ballast sailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel stones, whose poising weight
Steers thro' the whistling winds their steady flight. Dryden.

2. That which is used to make any thing steady.

Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

To BA'LLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ship, in order to keep her steady.

If that be so ballasted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins.

2. To keep any thing steady.

While thus to ballast love I thought,
And so more steadily to have gone,
I saw I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my pride,
And with true honour ballasted my pride. Dryden.

BARO'METER. n. ſ. [from βάρος, weight, and μέτρον, meaſure.] A machine for meaſuring the weight of the atmoſphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroſcope, which only ſhews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without ſpecifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, ſo called from Torricelli, the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643. It is a glaſs tube filled with mercury, horizontally ſealed at one end; the other open, and immerged in a baſin of ſtagnant mercury: ſo that, as the weight of the atmoſphere diminiſhes, the mercury in the tube will deſcend, and, as it increaſes, the mercury will aſcend; the column of mercury ſuſpended in the tube being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmoſphere.

The meaſuring the heights of mountains, and ſo finding the elevation of places above the level of the ſea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that eſſential property of the air, its gravity or preſſure. A the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoiſed by ſuch a [illegible] of equal weight, ſo whatever cauſes make the air heavier or lighter, the preſſure will be greater or leſſened, and conſequently the mercury will riſe or fall. Bacon.

Of this is another property of air, whereby it counterpoiſes a column of mercury from twenty ſeven inches and one half to thirty and one half, or gravity of the atmoſphere varying one tenth [illegible] that the exact [illegible] of the [illegible] with a [illegible] Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROMETRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

[illegible] Derh. Phyſico-Theol.

BA'RON. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, ſignified a brave warriour, or a bold man; and, from the firſt of theſe ſignifications, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others ſuppoſe it originally to ſignify only a man, in which ſenſe baron, or varon, is ſtill uſed by the Spaniards: and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uſes baron and femme, huſband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gauliſh word, ſignifying commander; others from the Hebrew בר, of the ſame import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which ſeems leaſt probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viſcount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all thoſe were called barons, that had ſuch ſignories as we now call court barons: and it is ſaid, that, after the Conqueſt, all ſuch came to the parliament, and ſat as nobles in the upper houſe. But when, by experience, it appeared that the parliament was too much crowded with ſuch multitudes, it became a cuſtom, that none ſhou'd come but ſuch as the king, for their extraordinary wiſdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men feeling that this ſtate of nobility was but caſual, and depending merely on the prince's pleaſure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male; and theſe were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whoſe poſterity are now thoſe barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleaſure. It is nevertheleſs thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be diſcerned by their titles; the barons by writ being thoſe that, to the title of lord, have their own ſurnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent are named by their baronies. Theſe barons, which were firſt by writ, may now juſtly alſo be called barons by preſcription; for that they have continued barons, in themſelves and their anceſtors, beyond the memory of man. There are alſo barons by tenure, as the biſhops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their biſhopricks, have always had place in the upper houſe of parliament, and are called lords ſpiritual.
2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of theſe the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his aſſiſtants, between the king and his ſubjects, in cauſes of juſtice belonging to the exchequer.
3. There are alſo barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the ſeven towns, Haſtings, Winchelſea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower houſe of parliament. Cowell.

They that bear
The cloth of ſtate above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakeſpeare.

4. Baron is uſed for the huſband in relation to his wife. Cowell.

Fixing the baſtion, unarm'd the baſtion. Prior.

Bat. n. ſ. [bat, Sax. This word ſeems to have given riſe to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, batty, and others. It probably ſignified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in oppoſition to a ſharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy ſtick or club.

A handſome bat he held,
On which he leaned, as one far in eld. Spenſer.

They were tried in arm chairs, and their bones broken with bats. Hakewill.

Bat. n. ſ. [veſpertilio, the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouſe and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a ſort of ſkin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and ſuckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, inſects, and fatty ſubſtances, ſuch as candles, oil, and cheeſe; and appears only in the ſummer evenings, when the weather is fine. Calmet.

When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly. Shakeſpeare.

But then grew reaſon dark; that fair ſtar no more
Could the fair forms of good and truth diſcern;
Bats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their acture to learn. Davies.

Moxon's Mechanical Exerciſes.

BATH. n. ſ. [baꝺ, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great eſteem with the ancients, eſpecially in complaints to be relieved by revulſion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and alſo in cutaneous caſes. But the modern practice has greateſt recourſe to the natural baths; moſt of which abound with a mineral ſulphur, as appears from their turning ſilver and copper blackiſh. The cold baths are the moſt convenient ſprings, or reſervatories, of cold water to waſh in, which the ancients had in great eſteem; and the preſent age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.
Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themſelves, have had ſome ſhare in their cure? Addiſon's Spectator.

2. A ſtate in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpoſe.
In the height of this bath, when I was more than half ſtewed in greaſe like a Dutch diſh, to be thrown into the Thames!

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together.
Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world.
L'Eſtrange.

2. Obſcenity; unchaſte language.

Pr'ythee say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps. Shakſpeare's Hamlet.

I have no ſalt: no bawdry he doth mean:
For witty, in his language, is obſcene. Ben Jonſon.

It is moſt certain, that barefaced bawdry is the pooreſt pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BA'WDY. adj. [from bawd.] Obſcene; unchaſte: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind, that kiſſes all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear it. Shakſpeare's Othello.

Only they,
That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakſpeare.

Not one poor bawdy jeſt ſhall dare appear;
For now the batter'd veteran ſtrumpets here
Pretend at leaſt to bring a modeſt ear. Suthern.

BA'WDY-HOUSE. n. f. A houſe where traffick is made by wickedneſs and debauchery.

Has the pope lately ſhut up the bawdy houſes, or does he continue to lay a tax upon them? Dennis.

To BAWL. v. n. [baler, Lat.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain. A word always uſed in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their ſenſeleſs mood,
And ſtill revolt, when truth would ſet them free.
Milton.

To cry the cauſe up heretofore,
And bawl the biſhops out of door. Hudibras.

Through the thick ſhades th' eternal ſcribbler bawls,
And ſhakes the ſtatues on their pedeſtals. Dryden.

From his lov'd home no lucre him can draw,
The ſenate's mad decrees he never ſaw,
Nor heard at bawling bars corrupted law. Dryden.

Loud menaces were heard, and foul diſgrace,
And bawling infamy, in language baſe,
Till ſenſe was loſt in ſound, and ſilence fled the place. Dryden's Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue
The liſt'ning nymphs and raviſh'd heroes hung;
But eyes and ſoft the heav'n-born muſick blam,
And bawl, and hiſs, and damn her into farce. Smith.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and trot ſoftly when I am only giddy and would ſleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and a woman chiding it. L'Eſtrange.

If they were never ſuffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and peeviſhneſs, contend for maſtery. Locke.

My huſband took him in, a ditty boy; it was the buſineſs of the ſervants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make ſuch a noiſe.
Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me when I ſaw labours, which had coſt ſo much, bawled about by common hawkers.
Swift.

BA'WSIN. n. f. A badger. Dict.

BAY. adj. [badius, Lat.]

A bay horſe is what is inclining to a cheſtnut; and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is leſs or more deep. There are alſo coloured horſes, that are called dappled bays. All bay horſes are commonly called brown by the common people.

All bay horſes have black manes, which diſtinguiſh them from the ſorrel, that have red or white manes.

There are light bays and gilded bays, which are ſomewhat of a yellowiſh colour. The cheſtnut bay is that which comes neareſt to the colour of the cheſtnut. Farrier's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courſer I rode on. 'Tis yours becauſe you liked it. Shakſpeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart to ride on a bay trotting horſe over four inch'd bridges. Shakſp.

His colour grey,
For beauty dappled, or the brighteſt bay. Dryden.

BAY. n. f. [baye, Dutch.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is ſhut in on all ſides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracuſian merchant,
Who put unluckily into the bay. Shakſpeare.

We have alſo ſome works in the midſt of the ſea, and ſome bays upon the ſhore for ſome works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the ſea. Bacon.

Hail, ſacred ſolitude! from this calm bay
I view the world's tempeſtuous ſea. Roſcommon.

Here in a royal bed the waters ſleep,
When tir'd at ſea, within this bay they creep. Dryd.

Some of you have bay. Dryden.

2. A pond head raiſed to keep in ſtore of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. f. [abboi, Fr. ſignifies the laſt extremity; as, Innocence eſt aux abbois. Boileau. Innocence is in the utmoſt diſtreſs. It is taken from abboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence ſignified the condition of a ſtag when the hounds were almoſt upon him.]

1. The ſtate of any thing ſurrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impoſſibility of eſcape.

This ſhip, for fifteen hours, fate like a ſtag among hounds at the bay, and was ſieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ſhips.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Fair liberty, purſued and meant a prey
To lawleſs power, here turn'd, and ſtood at bay.
Denham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by deſpair, he ſtood at bay;
Reſolv'd on death, he diſputes his fate,
And bounds about againſt the pond'rous ſpears. Dryd.

2. Some writers, perhaps miſtaking the meaning, have uſed bay as referred to the aſſailant, for diſtance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fir'd with noble emulation, ſtrive;
And with a ſtorm of darts to diſtance drive
The Trojan chief; who, held at bay, from far
On his Vulcan an orb ſuſtain'd the war. Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was beſt able to hold us at a bay. Swift.

BAY. n. f. In architecture, a term uſed to ſignify the magnitude of a building; as, if a barn conſiſts of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. Theſe bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors from ten to twelve broad, and uſually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent the faireſt houſe in it after threepence a bay. Shakſp.

There may be kept one thouſand buſhels in each bay, there being ſixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about ſeventeen wide, or three hundred ſquare feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY Tree. [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is tranſlated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green bay tree. Pſalms.

BAY. n. f. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, beſtowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign ſhall Euſden wear the bays.
Pope.

To BAY. v. n [abboyer, Fr.]

When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta. Shakſpeare.

If he ſhould doſe,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch
Baying him at the heels. Shakſpeare.

BAY Salt. Salt made of ſea water, which receives its conſiſtence from the heat of the ſun, and is ſo called from its brown colour. By letting the ſea water run into ſquare pits or baſons, its ſurface being ſtruck and agitated by the rays of the ſun, it thickens at firſt imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a light cruſt, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into ſalt. The water in this condition is ſcalding hot, and the cryſtallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at moſt fifteen days. Chambers.

All eruptions of air, though ſtrong and ſlight, give ſound, which we call crackling, puffing, ſpitting, &c. as in bay ſalt and bay leaves caſt into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.

It hath bay windows tranſparent as barricadoes. Shakſpeare.

Over against this church stands an hospital, erected by a shoemaker, who has been beatified, though never sainted. Addison.

BE'ATING. n. s. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of publick wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben Jon.

BEA'TITUDE. n. s. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all men's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little representation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. s. [beau, Fr. It is sounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, sounded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair? Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind
To Villroy, are the land nymphs so?
And fly they all, at once combin'd
To shame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BE'AVER. n. s. [bievre, French; fiber.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakewill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal, indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. A hat of the best kind, so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head,
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shak.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infants blood, and mothers tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shakespeare.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,
I only to the flight aspir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasure not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously, that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. s. [from beauteous.] The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Prior.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh.

The most important part of painting is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject: so in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet imitates, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rel'd by fickle mind,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the bodice, aptly lac'd
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape expresses,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS. n. s. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty, excellence of form.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth; those faces seeming rather to beautify than sorrow, than then sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shak.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and benefit. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAU'TY. n. s. [beauté, Fr.]

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.

If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleating sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

With incredible pains have I endeavoured to copy the several beauties of the ancient and modern historians. Arbuthnot.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pelides conqueror,
A woman, how all the beauties of the soul
He vastly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Addison.
Where on the ends, mendacious beauty, be?
Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live in thee? Dryden.

To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish: not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word. Shak.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The whiteness of swans makes them the beauty-spots of the animal creation. Grew.

BECA'FICO. n. s. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Peacham.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest;
Till beccaficos sold so devilish dear,
To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.

To BECA'LM. v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shines clear on the becalmed flood. Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whisp'ring airs, and the link'd mattin song,
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.
Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With calm dreams. Addison.
Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast;
Perhaps the wind just shifted from the east. Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to with-hold from motion.

BECA'ME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE. conjunct. [from by and cause.]

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition, either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins: only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of those as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

If any demands aliment, such as lean thens fibres without breaking, because of the slate of action. Arbuthnot.

To BECHA'NCE. v. n. [from be and chance.] To befal; to happen to: a word proper, but now in little use.

My sons, God knows what hath bechanced them. Shakespeare.

All happiness bechance to thee at Milan. Shak.

BE'CHICKS. n. s. [βηχικα, of βηξ, a cough.] Medicines proper for relieving coughs. Dict.

To BE'CK. v. n. [beacn, Sax, bec, Fr. head.] To make a sign with the head.

To BE'CK. v. a. To call or guide, as by a motion of the head.

Bell, book, and candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and silver becks me to come on. Shak.
Oh this false soul of Egypt, this grey charm,
Whose eye becked forth my wars, and call'd them home. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

BE'CK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sign with the head; a nod.

Hither, nymph, and bring with thee
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nod, and becks, and wreathed smiles. Milton.

2. A nod of command.

Neither the lusty kind shewed any roughness, nor the easier any idleness; but still like a well-obeyed master, whose beck is enough for discipline. Sidney.

Then forthwith to him takes a chosen band
Of spirits, likest to himself in guile,
To be at hand, and at his beck appear. Milton.

The menial fair, that round her wait,
At Helen's beck prepare the room of state. Pope.

To BE'CKON. v. n. To make a sign without words.

Alexander beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people. Acts, xxi. 40.

When he had raised my thoughts by their transporting airs, he beckoned to me, and, by waving of his hand, directed me to sit down. Addison.

Sudden you mount, you beckon from the skies;
Clouds interpose, waves roar, and winds arise. Pope.

To BE'CKON. v. a. [from beck, or beacn, Sax. a sign.] To make a sign to.

With her two crooked hands the signs did make,
And beckon'd him. Fairy Queen.

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone. Shakespeare.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear. Dryd.

To BECLI'P. v. a. [of be clyppan, Sax.] To embrace. Dict.

To BECO'ME. v. n. pret. I became; comp. pret. I have become. [from by and come.]

1. To enter into some state or condition, by a change from some other.

The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Genesis, ii. 7.

And unto the Jews I became a Jew, that I might gain the Jews. 1 Corin. ix. 20.

A smaller pear, grafted upon a stock that beareth a greater pear, will become great. Bacon.

My voice thou oft hast heard, and hast not fear'd,
But still rejoic'd; how is it now become
So dreadful to thee? Milton.

So the least faults, if mix'd with fairest deed,
Or future ill become the fatal seed. Prior.

2. To become of. To be the fate of; to be the end of; to be the subsequent or final condition of. It is observable, that this word is never, or very seldom, used but with what, either indefinite or interrogative.

What is then become of so huge a multitude, as would have overspread a great part of the continent. Raleigh.

Perplex'd with thoughts, what would become
Of me, and all mankind. Milton.

The first hints of the circulation of the blood were taken from a common person's wondering what became of all the blood that issued out of the heart. Grauntt.

What will become of me then? for, when he is free, he will infallibly accuse me. Dryden.

What became of this thoughtful busy creature, when removed from this world, has amazed the vulgar, and puzzled the wise. Rogers.

3. In the following passage, the phrase, where is he become? is used for, what is become of him?

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakesp.

To BECO'ME. v. a. [from be or by, and cpemen, Sax. to please.]

1. Applied to persons, to appear in a manner suitable to something.

If I become not a cut as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. Shakespeare.

Why would I be a queen? because my face
Would wear the title with a better grace;
If I became it not, yet it would be
Part of your duty then to flatter me. Dryden.

2. Applied to things, to be suitable to the person; to befit; to be congruous to the appearance, or character, or circumstances, in such a manner as to add grace; to be graceful.

She to her sire made humble reverence,
And bowed low, that her right well became,
And added grace unto her excellence. Fairy Queen.

I would I had some flowers o' the spring that might Become your time of day; and your's, and your's,
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing. Shakespeare.

Yet be it so, good brothers;
For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you. Shak.
Your dimension,
Manly step, portly mien, and brave the state
Of courtiers gay which you should become. Shakesp.

Why only were my opinions, or rather I of his; for it becomes me to speak of so excellent a poet. Dryden.

He utterly rejected their fables concerning their gods, as not becoming good men, much less those which were worshipped for gods. Stilling fleet.

BECO'MING. participial adj. [from become.] That which pleases by an elegant propriety; graceful. It is sometimes used with the participle of; but generally without without any government of the following words.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know-not what, in faces.
Suckling.

Their discourses are such as belong to their age, their calling, and their breeding; such as are becoming of them, and of them only. Dryden.

Yet some becoming boldness I may use;
I've will deserv'd, nor will it now refuse. Dryden.

Make their pupils repeat the action, that they may correct what is confused in it, till it be perfected into an habitual and becoming easiness. Locke.

BECO'MING. n. s. [from become.] Ornament. A word not now in use.

Sir, forgive me,
Since my becomings kill me when they not
Eye well to you. Shakespeare.

A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as Nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryd.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man
From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chace began;
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

To take rise; to commence.

Judgment must begin at the house of God.
1 Peter.

The song began from Jove. Dryden.

All began.

All ends in love of God and love of man. Pope.

To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,
And tear began to flow. Dryden.

To BEGI'N. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Calydon, begin the song. Pope.

They have been awaked, by divine awful fervors, to begin religion; and afterwards, the very virtue has improved itself into more refined principles, by divine grace. Hammond.

2. To trace from any thing, as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which lead us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn, had need be early begun with. Government of the Tongue.

BEGI'NNER. n. s. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,
To loss of love adjoining loss of fame,
I meant to purge both with a third mischief,
And, in my woe's beginner, it to end. Sidney.

Socrates maketh Ignorance, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Pallas arm, beholding herself not only the beginner, brought the honour to the former form. Sandys.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty expansion of an active and knowledge in such as are entered. Hooker.

I have taken a list of several hundreds, to a sermon of a new beginner, which not one could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGI'NNING. n. s. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by reason of all its parts. Locke.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. Genesis.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what manner of life like to be, do even now
We may our end by our beginning know. Daniel.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,
Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow:
Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,
Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow.
Dryden.

The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of those causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of those designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broome.

To BEGI'RD. v. a. I begirt, or begirded; I have begirt. [from be and gird.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird the Almighty throne,
Beseeching, or besieging. Milton.

Or should she, confident
As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,
Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,
To enamour. Milton.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears;
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleaguer; to block up.

It was so closely begirt, before the king's men had in the west, that the council humbly entreated his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To BEGI'RT. v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer.] To begird. See BEGIRD.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,
To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him. Ben Jonson.

BE'GLERBEG. n. s. [Turkish.] The chief governour of a province among the Turks.

To BEGNA'W. v. a. [from be and gnaw.] To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

As Diana's visages is now begrim'd, and black
As my own face. Shakespeare.

To BEGUI'LE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossians.

The serpent me beguil'd, and I did eat! Milton.

Whosoever sees a man, who would have beguiled and imposed upon him by making him believe a lye, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness deprive that benefit,
To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,
When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
And frustrate his proud will. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakespeare.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile;
These do by fits her phantasy possess. Sir J. Davies.

BEGU'N. The participle passive of begin.

But thou, bright morning star, thou rising sun,
Which in these latter times art brought to light
Those mysteries, that since the world begun
Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Sir J. Davies.

BEHA'LF. n. s. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part. It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit; the pronunciation degenerating easily to behaf; which, in imitation of other words so sounded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf.]

1. Favour; cause favoured: we say in behalf, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who desired the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Matilda would be pleaded in her lover's behalf. Addison.

Never was any author like to meet with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in his behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in the particular duty of his vocation, in the behalf of his master, be bold. Sidney.

In the land,
Or in behalf of man, or mankind. Milton.

Others believe that, by the two luminaries, no more is meant but prosperity or affliction; and by the behalf, an encouragement. Wilkins.

To BEHA'VE. v. a. [from be and have.]

1. To carry; to conduct: used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves [illegible]. Judith.

Modest fame came from heaven, and bade them that behaved themselves [illegible]. Spenser.

To their will we leave them, and their fortune:
No man like them, how that be, can fortune. Ben Jonson.

We to live, and fear it, as if we were certain the final ultimate event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Sidney.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to forbear; to discipline: but this is not now used.

But who the limbs with labour, and his mind
Behaves with cares, cannot to envy grow. Fairfax.

With fair order and unmoved pace
He and his host marched on to fight,
As if he had but prov'd an ugly mask. Shakespeare.

To BEHA'VE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHA'VIOUR. n. s. [from behave.]

My father, whose behaviour hath ever been full of honour, sobriety, and [illegible]. Sidney.

2. External appearance with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dorus's demeaning, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney.

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour that a thralled heart could express. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or look into God for favour, we fall down; because the posture of constancy becometh best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One may see how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shakesp.

And

And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Samuel.

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifice to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution, a state in which a failure in behaviour will have had consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superiour power. L'Estrange.

To BEHE'AD. v. a. [from be and head.] To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.

On each side they fly,
Beheaded in the rear, and with destructive sweep,
Load all before. Philips

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison.

BEHE'LD. participle passive from behold, which see

Hail! ye virgin daughter of the main!
Nymphs, devout, whom pious hopes held again! Pope.

BE'HEMOTH. n. s. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bochart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The Fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant. Calmet.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job.

Behemoth was his hind. Thomson.

BE'HEN. } n. s. Valerian root. Also a
BEN. } fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dict.

Son of man! behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel.

When Thessalians on horseback were beheld to light off, while their horses watered, while their horses were depressed, they were conceived by the beholders to be one animal. Browne's Vulgar Errours.

Man looks aloft, and with erected look
Beholds his own hereditary light. Dryden.

At this the furious man again he took,
With thund'ring passion and with wrongful force assail'd.
The Saviour comes, by ancient bards foretold:
Hear him, ye deaf, and all ye blind behold! Pope.

BEHO'LD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo. a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Genesis.
When out of hope, behold! her knight came by.
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow
To make her amiable.

BEHO'LDEN. particip. adj. [gehalden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation.] This word is very corruptly written beholden. Obliged, bound in gratitude. It has the particle to.

Hours, which such as you are beholden to your wives for. Swift.

Little are we beholden to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands. Shakespeare.

I found you alike in respect of blood, both very near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies wherein I must acknowledge myself much beholden to you. Bacon.

I think myself mightily beholden to you for that reprehension you then gave us. Addison.

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive what savage creatures they would be without it, and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDER. n. s. [from beheld.] Spectator, he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink? Shakespeare.

These beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern
Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee? Milton.

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight. Dunbar.

The jolting chariots in vain encourage him,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Granville.

The chantre of cathedrals, in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity, and raise envy rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury.

BEHO'LDING adj [corrupted from beholden] Obliged See BEHOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. s. Obligation.

Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony Carew.

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. s. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged

Thinking myself unworthy of his court, so as I make acknowledgment of my beholdingness unto him. Sidney.

If this my debt I seem loath to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne.

BEHO'OF. n. s. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous; profit, advantage

He may alter any thing of those laws, to serve his own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser.

No meaner recompence it brings
To its transcendent cause, great as it is,
Than to the pow'r of goodness infinite,
Who from the womb of this wide vacuity
To what hath fashion'd heaven and earth can bring
All useful matter in the place chosen,
To her original darkness, and your sway,
Which from the utmost south extends to north,
Will thou some star, which from the ruined roof
Of fixed Olympus by misfortune didst fall,
What useful part, in nature's use behoof,
Work up, and in the place did remain? Milton.

Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that, upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray.

It would be of no behoof, for the settling of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke.

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behopan, Saxon, it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet: either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest well-spring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker.

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behooved or became him to perform. Atterbury.

But should you lure the monarch of the brook, Behooves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

BEHO'OVFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

It is very behooveful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of grass, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser.

Laws are many times full of imperfections, and that which is supposed behooveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

Madam, we have cull'd such necessaries
As are behooveful for our state to-morrow. Shak.

It may be most behooveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publickly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon.

BEHO'OVFULLY, adv. [from behooveful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these, and that may more behoovefully import the reformation. Spenser.

BEHO'T. [preterite, as it seems, of behight, to promise.]

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker.

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Tho' author of her being, and being there. Davies.

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent,
Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley.

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits which, ordain'd by fate,
For future being and new bodies wait. Dryden.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;
Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope.

3. The person existing.

Ah fair, yet false! ah being form'd to cheat
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit! Dryd.

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison, Spectator.

BE'ING. conjunct. [from be.] Since. Dict.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.
